NOTICE: MILITIAS AND ALL AMERICANS!!

Pray that the crime of Oklahoma, like John Brown's, brings forth a spiritual force with power to prevail over the enemies of our human society.

The most heinous crime known to man is the destruction of a whole people by destroying their culture and their human society. For many years, the subversion of our country was led and financed by the evil empire. Today it is our own taxes and government, led by a renegade media and Court, that corrupts and destroys.

The American people have the power to oust this evil party. But motivation for organization and prudent action can only come from understanding, comprehension of the evil, the lies, and the truth of our danger. This truth must guide and provide the will. Organize groups to study and understand how to prevail.

Letters from some of the toughest, best educated magazine readers in America.

There are persons...who see not the full extent of the evil which threatens them; they solace themselves with hopes that the enemy, if he succeed, will be merciful. It is the madness of folly to expect mercy from those who have refused to do justice; and even mercy, where conquest is the object, is only a trick of war; the cunning of the fox is as murderous as the violence of the wolf, and we ought to guard equally against both.

From The Publisher

Greetings to the most intelligent readers in America! We are most grateful to have your support for Media Bypass. We are growing and we will make a measurable difference. The truth will prevail.

Tree Top Communications has survived its first year in the publishing business and it has not been an easy task for any of our dedicated staff. We have experienced about every problem that can be encountered in the publishing business but we are not complaining, just stretching our muscles to do a better job for you.

Believe it or not, one major problem is just trying to keep track of our subscribers. People are on the move and they do not get our permission. Our subscription 800 numbers are located at a different site and many mistakes are recorded on data entry. The phone company has stolen our telephone numbers and made them available to another party. We have been sued for millions of dollars and have threats currently pending. Gee it's so much fun that everyone should be involved! Is America worth it? Yes - Yes-Yes!

We regret the loss of Mr. Eric Neese, editor of Media Bypass. He was a great help in starting Media Bypass and the name was his idea. Eric did resign from our company on friendly terms.

We are pleased to announce that a new editor has just come aboard. Mr. Rich Azar is an experienced editor and reporter for newspapers and he is a graduate of the Indiana University School of Journalism. Welcome aboard Rich. We now have two experienced, top-notch reporters on board. Our staff has also been expanded in other areas.

We also welcome Perceptions Magazine and others to our Satellite Radio Channel. Plans have been made to upgrade the quality of that service in the near future.

Our efforts have been supported by many talk show hosts throughout the country and we certainly appreciate your help. It has made a difference and we hope to maintain the wonderful relationship that has been established. Perhaps someday we can "scratch your back."

Media Bypass Magazine has been classified by some groups as a "right-wing" publication. Some Christians have remarked that we cover too much milita news and pictures of guns. Some point out other subjects that we have not published. We may never publish some subjects but we do not intentionally omit any. We strive to give you information not well covered by the mainstream media.

I believe that I can safely say that had it not been for guns there would never have been a Declaration of Independence or a Constitution of the United States to protect Christians, Jews or any other religions or races in America. When we lose that protection then we have lost our country for sure.

To the editor:

Texe Marrs, in "Terror Stalking America" (Media Bypass, July 1995), states that Hitler ordered the burning of the Reichstag in Berlin in 1933. He goes on to point out parallels between Hitler and President Clinton, and strongly implies that Clinton might have instigated the bombing of the federal building in Oklahoma City.

The burning of the Reichstag is authoritatively covered in the book "KGB," written by former Communist spies Christopher Andrew and Oleg Gordievsky. The authors point out that the implication of the Nazis in the burning of the Reichstag was brought about by the Communists who fabricated a document, "The Brown Book." This book was accepted as truth by much of the anti-Nazi community until 1962 when a West German journalist, Fritz Tobias, demolished both Communist and Nazi conspiracy theories and demonstrated that in all probability the Dutch arsonist, Marinus van der Lubbe, set the fire single-handedly in the vain hope of provoking a popular uprising.

Van der Lubbe, who had insisted from the start that he was solely responsible, was found guilty and executed. All the Communist defendants were cleared, which embarrassed the Nazis. The Communists organized a "counter-trial" in London's Lincoln Inn in the Law Society's Court Room, a proceeding that had the appearance of a British Crown Court. Many important people testified. Witnesses came in disguise; doors were kept locked. The "trial" ended on an inconclusive note.

A second edition of the "Brown Book" was produced to point the finger at the Nazis. All of this was proved to be a forgery. The entire campaign to implicate the Nazis was organized by the Soviet secret operatives to serve the purposes of the Comintern and to win a propaganda victory and to lure some British intellectuals into a secret war against fascism under Comintern direction.

Marrs calls President Clinton a fascist. He hints at federal complicity in the bombing of the federal building. Let us hope that he has something more substantial than the "Brown Book" for his evidence.

To the editor:

Thank you for your incredibly fast response to my subscription order — I am impressed!

I really appreciate your coverage of talk radio — your July issue is now among my reference books. I believe your two-page airwaves schedule should be updated annually, and maybe sold as a laminated reference guide! I've been into talk radio for about a year, but I wasn't aware how interesting shortwave has become!

I like seeing our own Wayne Jeffries and David Gold mentioned, but I believe you missed someone very important — Art Bell. From 11 p.m. to 4 a.m. Pacific, Art has gotten me through many lonely graveyard shifts back in Portland, Ore. Here in Texas, I get him (barely) from San Antonio for three hours (cut for the local schedule), but I know he broadcasts on satellite and on shortwave for an hour or so.

The main thing about Art Bell is that he does not screen his calls (beyond Caller I.D. for the occasional troublemaker). So his show is basically, "East of the Rockies line, you're on the air!"

Also, check out his "Dreamland" show on Sunday nights — 7 a.m. Pacific, where he explores the fringe subjects out there (UFOs, virtual reality, earthquake predictions, etc.). He may not rate as a "most dangerous talker," but he deserves a second look!

Thank you for your brilliant magazine, and I look forward to every issue (Jim Thomas is excellent!)

To the editor:

I love alternate sources of info such as "Media Bypass" magazine! My brain pumps when I read stuff in it that no one else is telling me about! So many people I know "think" that the "mainstream media" is the only source of info, that it really discourages me sometimes. I just want to tell them to wake up — why assume Peter Jennings is gonna tell you everything you should know about? Karen-Lee Bixman's piece on the biochip transponder in your July issue caused me to reach a new plateau in the experience of being interested in something!

Please keep "digging" through the murk and deception of the common "news" to bring us the real stories and facts that can really matter in our present and future life.

Thanks a lot. Keep fightin' the fight.

To the editor:

Here's my payment for a year's subscription to your excellent magazine. This is the first time, after some 30 years of bill paying, that I feel happy to pay a bill I never received.

Michael Douds

To the editor:

Please sign us up for one year instead of the trial subscription. I don't like the thought of missing an issue. Love the truth in reporting your magazine provides — it puts all the other so-called news tripe to shame. Their liberal intensity is extremely insulting to people who can read. Thanks again.

John Wilson,
Catawissa, Pa.

To the editor:

My name is Robert (Bob) Moldenhauer and I ran as a Libertarian last November for Illinois lieutenant governor. The following was my eight-point plan to return Illinois to constitutional government:

1. End prohibition of drugs, prostitution, gambling and any activity done among consenting individuals. Prohibition costs Illinois in excess of $1 billion annually!

2. Fully inform jurors of their rights, including jurors' nullification right. Fully informed jurors anchor liberty.

3. Veto any legislation without a sunset provision, or a term limit on legislation. Also, request that the legislature review existing laws, eliminate obsolete legislation and attach sunset provisions to the remainder.

4. Eliminate mandates. Mandatory is antithetical to liberty.

5. Privatize most government functions, including schools.

6. Immediately reduce taxes by adhering to proper definition of income. Reduced taxes will force spending reductions.

7. Significantly reduce Illinois' debt, with eventual goal of zero.

8. Freeze hiring and allow bureaucracy to reduce through attrition.

Libertarians agree that adherence to this plan will return Illinois to constitutional government, promote Illinois' general welfare, ensure domestic tranquility and restore justice under law.

Both the Illinois and U.S. constitutions specifically prohibit government infringement upon keeping and bearing arms. Gun control contradicts this prohibition by infringing upon inalienable property rights; therefore, gun control violates both constitutions. Adherence to constitutional government requires opposition to gun control.

Please note all attorneys are officers of the court, and therefore, the attorneys' primary duty is to the court. I am not an attorney, and therefore, my primary duty, by affirmation, is to constitutional government.

Robert Moldenhauer

To the editor:

I received my first issue (July 1995) and find it extremely interesting. I read most of the articles the first day.

I found the article concerning the implants (Big Brother Wants to Watch You) particularly interesting, as I have been anecdotally commenting on these implants for some time, to wit:

The majority of ordinary citizens, including many nominal Christians (whose only real interest is bread and circuses), will accept the implant in their hands; the truly sincere servant of Satan will take the implant in his forehead. When they pass through the grocery line, the ordinary citizen, while he nonchalantly stares off into space, will unobtrusively pass his hand over the reader. The true Satanist, however, will proudly bend forward and pass his forehead over the reader, and as often as he does this, he will proudly, publicly, be doing obeisance in remembrance of his god.

In all seriousness, I exhort all people to refuse to take this implant. However, if one feels, and most will, that as a practical matter he must take this implant, it might prove prudent to take it in the hand. I know that Christian preachers teach that once you take Satan's sign there is no hope for you; however, Christ's own words may give you hope. Remember, Christ himself said, "If a hand offends you...." (Matthew 5:30).

Keep up the good work. Until later, I am, a friend of Christ,
Robert Paul Johnson
Powell, Tenn.

To the editor:

There is an evil demonic cult called psychiatry. Why is it that neither you, nor Rush, nor Patty Bobson ever have anything to say about this evil demonic cult?

Is it because psychiatrists are rich people and they have grown rich off tax-paid ripoffs? Is it because anyone who speaks out against your evil society is confined to an asylum, and so psychiatrists are doing your dirty work for you?

Of all the tax-paid ripoffs, it is strange that you are so strangely secretive about the multi-billion dollar tax-paid psychiatry scam.

Obviously, psychiatry is NOT part of the New World Order. No! Psychiatry is part of the OLD World Order of right-wing fascist ripoffs, loot, lies, cover-ups, fraud and the destruction of innocent lives.

Robert R. Martyr

Salem, OR

To the editor:

I'm enclosing my subscription. I'll try this out for one year, because I admire your effort to be a major alternative magazine.

However, I do have concerns:

A) I want to see more good news and stories about successes of individuals and groups, where government power was defeated, lousy politicians voted out, etc.

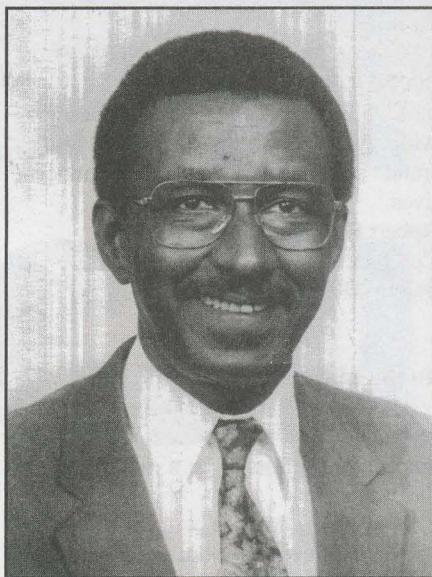

B) No more criticism of people who help our movement for freedom, such as Rush Limbaugh. Just because someone doesn't talk as strong of a constitutionalist line as the next patriot doesn't mean we should bash them. Our enemies love for us to be divided. Rush Limbaugh has done a lot to wake up the "sleeping middle class" of the U.S. of A.

C) I'd like to see an objective, realistic story about possible alternatives to the present tax system of the Gestapo IRS. I'm very interested in getting rid of Social Security numbers.

Thank you and good luck!

The nation's capital provides one of the best examples of the destructiveness of liberal ideas. Washington used to be a thriving city where free persons of color and freed slaves established flourishing family businesses that covered the gamut from taxicabs and small stores to hotels and restaurants. The city was also home to many well-educated descendants of freed slaves.

As early as 1899, the black students of Washington's Paul Lawrence Dunbar High School scored higher than any of the white schools in the District of Columbia. From 1870 to 1955, most Dunbar graduates went to college, including schools like Oberlin, Harvard, Amherst, Williams and Wesleyan. Washington was home to a broad, upwardly mobile black middle class.

All that has changed. According to Philip Murphy's article in Policy Review, Washington has "the highest per-capita murder and violent-crime rates, the highest percentage of residents on public assistance, the highest-paid school board, the lowest SAT scores, the most single-parent families and the most lawyers per capita." Neighborhoods, once bustling and serene, are now economic wastelands where law abiding residents live in daily terror.

People are fleeing Washington in droves. The result is not white flight, but black flight to the suburbs. During the second half of the 1980s alone, over 157,000, or one fifth of Washington's population, moved. This exodus disproportionately consisted of black households earning between $30,000 and $50,000 a year. Today, Washington's population is 578,000, down from a peak of 800,000.

Can we blame racism for Washington's emergence into a bankrupt Third World type of city? To do so requires a lot of imagination. Washington is a city where the mayor is black, the chief of police is black, the superintendent of schools is black and most of the city council is black. Can we blame poor revenue sources? According to Murphy, the city takes in an astonishing $8,950 in revenue for every man, woman and child in its jurisdiction. That's to be compared to $4,000 and $3,700 in nearby Maryland and Virginia, respectively. Nonetheless, the city is in receivership. Its bonds have achieved junk status because it manages to spend $1,000 more per person than it receives in revenue. The city's deficit is approaching $1 billion.

Washington's story can be told in varying degrees in other predominantly black cities. The story is a monument to the failure of the liberal ideas of Democrats, black politicians and civil-rights organizations. Liberals have convinced blacks that we deal with crime not by arresting and locking up criminals, but by searching for crime's original causes. This theory gives criminals carte blanche to prey on law-abiding citizens. Liberals have convinced blacks that we deal with educational fraud by spending more money to create programs that fall just short of lunacy. Liberals don't expose their children to this nonsense — they enroll their children in private schools, as does Franklin Smith, Washington's superintendent of public schools.

Victims of the liberals are mostly poor, black people who have few options — such as Sheila Stamps, a widowed mother of five living in a housing project. She complains, "You can't let the children out by themselves, and the playground is littered with intravenous needles." Like most black parents, Stamps wants school choice, saying: "Any child in this city should be able to go to the best schools. If they meet the criteria, let them go. But her liberal "benefactors" say no.

When black Americans finally come to the full realization of what liberals have done to us, it's going to make last November's political revolution look like a Girl Scout outing.

How to Legally Stop Paying Federal Income Tax

Call the IRS at 1-800-829-1040 and ask them this question: "What law or statute makes me liable to file an individual income tax return?" This one question holds the key to your success. No matter what the IRS tells you, write it down. But don't take my or anyone else's word for it. Call and find out the answer for yourself. The IRS might tell you the 16th Amendment is the law that gives them the authority to tax you. But the 16th Amendment gives Congress the authority to tax "income." What you earn for your labor is "wages." More than likely the IRS will cite a section of the IRS Code, also known as Title 26. But a quick phone call or trip to the library will reveal that the IRS Code is not law—that it has never been law and is merely Prima Facie law, which is only presumed to be true until disproven by evidence to the contrary.

After you have completed your research and found out on your own that there is no law which makes you liable to file an individual income tax return, it's time to take action. At the least, call and order the video, Liberty in the Balance for $24.95. This is the video that I recommend to anyone interested in getting out of the system. If you enjoy reading, I highly recommend the book, IRS Humbug for $29.95. If you're interested in purchasing our Educational Package, for $59.95 we'll send you the video and book listed above, plus a copy of the Constitution, a 30-page booklet on the subject of Common Law, Unincorporated Trusts, my 24-page booklet entitled, The Great Snow Job—The Story of Taxes and Money, (which includes both a formal legal presentation on the subject of taxes and a copy of the letter my wife and I received from the IRS indicating that we are no longer required to file a federal income tax return) and 2 issues of "Anti-Shyster" magazine.

Chelation (KEY-LA-SHUN):

rhymes with elation, an emotion prevalent among an increasing number of adherents here and abroad.

There is a safe, effective and non-surgical procedure that can overcome heart disease and help patients avoid strokes, allergies, fatigue and a host of other health ailments. It can even help your sex life.

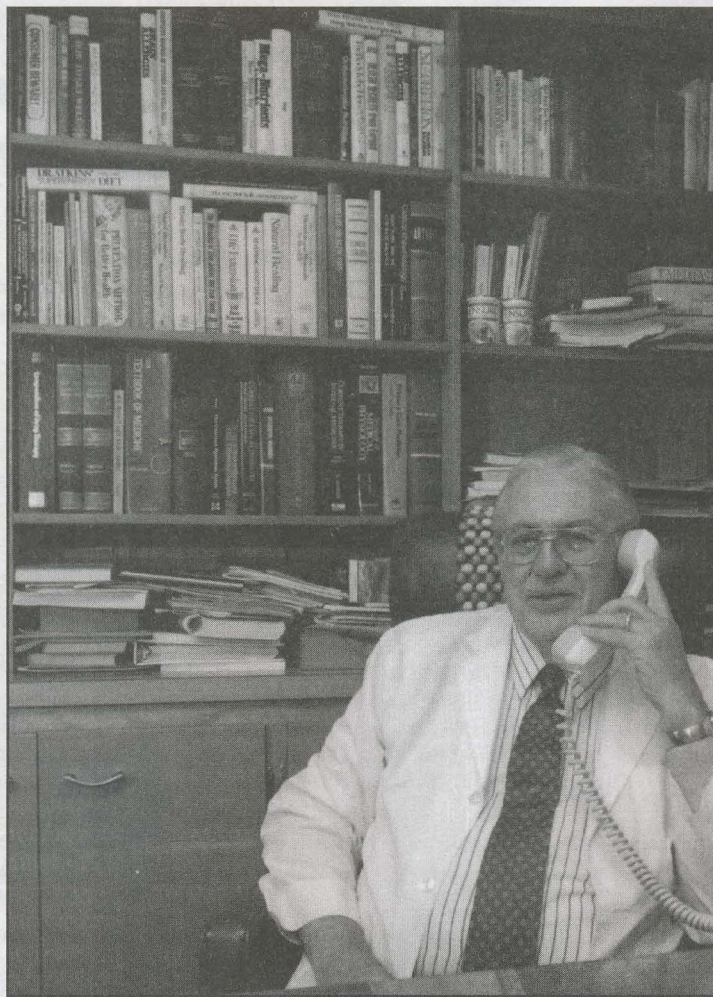

Who says so?

Not the American Medical Association. Not the Food and Drug Administration. Not the many and varied vested interest groups that profit from medical orthodoxy in the form of heart bypass surgery, balloon angioplasty and patented pharmaceuticals.

More than 500,000 people successfully treated with chelation therapy say so. Chelation (KEY-LA-SHUN) rhymes with elation, an emotion prevalent among an increasing number of adherents here and abroad.

The FDA has in fact approved chelation therapy for limited use, primarily to remove lead and other toxic heavy metals from the body. The procedure gained notoriety in the 1950s when it successfully flushed lead from the bodies of shipyard workers, but approval for wider use has languished in bureaucratic red tape ever since.

Chelation therapy involves the intravenous administration of a synthetic, protein-like chemical commonly known by the acronym EDTA (ethylene diamine tetra-acetic acid) in a saline base that includes vitamin C, magnesium and other nutrients. The solution is introduced slowly, over the course of several hours, into the body and subsequently travels through some 60,000 miles of blood vessels.

Along the way, EDTA triggers the breakdown of plaque — calcium, fats, cholesterol, heavy metals and other components — that clogs the arteries, restricts blood flow and often leads to heart disease. Once “clawed” from the arterial walls (chelation comes from the Greek word chele, or claw), these components become a part of the EDTA solution and exit the body through urination.

If the process works as intended — and proponents claim a success rate of up to 80 percent — the patient is left with unblocked arteries, improved circulation and no need for painful and expensive heart bypass surgery. Such patients bypass the bypass with a chemical Roto-Rooter, if you will.

And while critics of bypass surgery claim the procedure is first and foremost a money-making scheme for the medical establishment, most everyone agrees that its “benefits” are fleeting. The operation customarily involves removal of an artery, usually from the leg, that is surgically attached to the heart so that blood bypasses the affected artery; it does nothing to remedy other blood vessels that may be partially clogged and may themselves ultimately require replacement.

The AMA touts bypass surgery as a "common procedure for restoring health and vigor to people suffering from coronary artery disease." No one disputes that the procedure is common: Some 250,000 are performed each year in the United States at a cost of $25,000 to $40,000 each, a total health-care expenditure of more than $10 billion, according to published data.

However, advocates of chelation therapy have long cast a skeptical eye on the purported benefits of bypass surgery. "What do we get for our money?" ask authors Harold and Arline Brecher in their book, "Forty Something Forever."

"Most of the fine results claimed for bypass surgery come from the typewriters of ad agency hacks and not from the halls of science...a careful look at results reveals it doesn't help the vast majority of those who undergo it," the Brechers wrote.

Believers in chelation therapy not only consider it an effective, relatively inexpensive and non-invasive alternative to surgery, they also tout several other purported health benefits, including the removal of metallic ions that can produce toxic effects in the body.

"By the chelation of toxins from the cells, the life of those cells has been extended," wrote authors John Parks Trowbridge, M.D. and Morton Walker in their book, "The Healing Powers of Chelation Therapy."

"Your body has been rid of much accumulated devastation from, for example, metallic pollutants you've eaten, destructive free radicals produced by food additives, chemicals and radiation, and assorted foreign elements that cause cellular breakdown," the authors wrote.

However, the process can also draw beneficial minerals from the body, often creating the need for patients to take vitamin and mineral supplements during treatment.

Patients typically undergo at least 20 treatments costing roughly $100 per infusion. Medicare and most private insurance plans refuse to reimburse patients because chelation therapy rests outside the confines of mainstream medicine.

The purveyors of conventional medicine insist there is no scientific data to support the use of chelation therapy for heart disease, nor for its other claimed health benefits. Dr. Daniel Sullivan, an associate professor of internal medicine at the Moffitt Cancer Center at the University of South Florida, put it succinctly in a recent article published in the Louisville Courier-Journal:

"It's all (expletive deleted)," he said. Furthermore, many physicians have suggested that chelation therapy has a placebo effect on the body, that is, the patient's health improves, at least temporarily, because he or she believes it will. Critics also are quick to note that failure to follow doctor's orders can be harmful to your health.

But if the proof of the pudding is in the tasting, then the proof of chelation therapy is in the living. Consider these testimonials:

* Benson Morrison, then 75, sought Dr. Trowbridge's advice concerning clogged carotid arteries in the neck that caused bouts of dizziness and fainting. He was also concerned about impotence.

"I couldn't walk too far before, maybe just a little way, and then I'd feel like I was going to black out," he was quoted as saying. Regarding his impotence, Morrison said his sex life "had just died. During the last seven years, everything just went caflooy." The symptoms "all stopped" following treatment, he said.

*Dave Davis, of Evansville, Ind., was quoted in the Courier-Journal article as saying that for nearly four years following a quintuple-bypass operation, "I didn't have the energy to get out of one chair and move to another." Chelation therapy, in concert with another controversial alternative treatment involving hydrogen peroxide, led Davis to exclaim that now, "I can do whatever I want. I feel 100 times better."

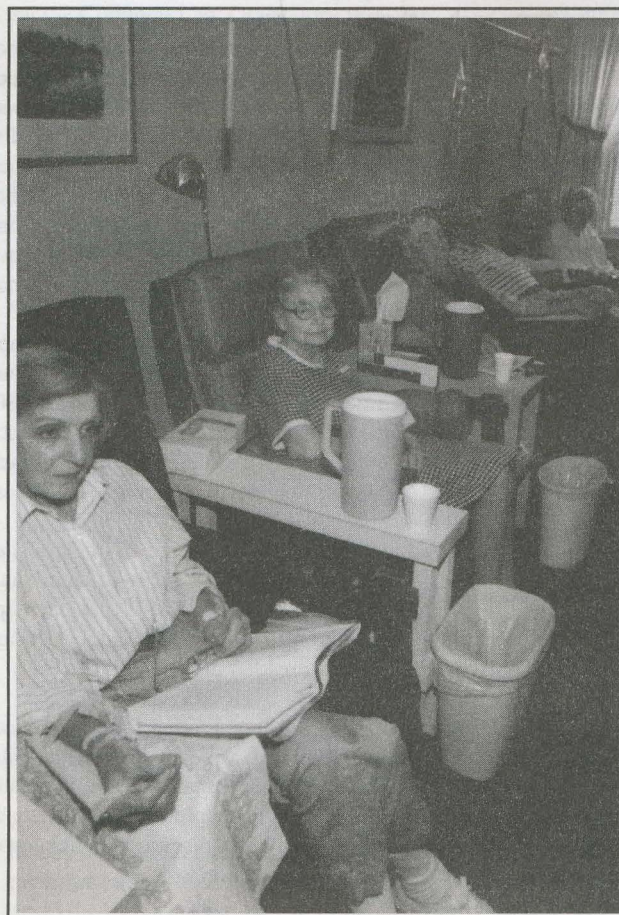

*A 50-year-old man had three balloon angioplasties — a high-tech procedure in which a camera-guided, balloon-tipped catheter is inflated at the site of blockage to clear a clogged artery — during a six-month period, according to his physician, Dr. Michael B. Schachter, writing in "Alternative Medicine Digest."

Still, the man could scarcely walk a city block without severe chest pain. When his cardiologist recommended a fourth angioplasty, the patient decided to try chelation therapy. "After 24 EDTA infusions, he could walk for 60-90 minutes, three times per week, with little or no discomfort," the doctor wrote.

Schachter concluded that if EDTA were widely accepted as an alternative to bypass operations alone, savings would amount to around $8 billion annually.

"Surely that's an alternative worth pursuing," he wrote.

CHELATION THERAPY

AN ALTERNATIVE TREATMENT FOR ATHEROSCLEROSIS

Let me begin by stating that I have not had professional medical training and I am not giving medical advice but I am speaking from experience. Chelation therapy made a new man out of me and prolonged my life.

This is what I wish to share with Media Bypass readers.

At the age of 66 my circulatory system had degenerated to a point of where I was almost incapacitated, unable to do simple chores like taking out the trash for weekly pickups. I had severe angina pains and no reserve energy. Like most people do, I consulted my medical doctor and after a thorough examination he gave the news that nothing could be done and that my life span was near termination.

Being aware of and having done research on many alternative treatments for various diseases, I asked my doctor about this "quack" chelation therapy. He advised me that it would not hurt me, but such would be a total waste of money. Of course what I paid him was not a waste, because he confirmed what I already knew.

After my M.D. learned that I would be trying the chelation therapy, he put me on his "S" list and I have not been able to get another appointment with him.

Chelation is derived from the Greek word "chele," meaning claw. It is a solution containing man-made amino acid and when injected into the bloodstream, it grasps certain minerals such as lead, mercury, cadmium and others while circulating within the blood stream. The acid solution will be secreted by the kidneys, usually within 24 hours. By chelation of toxins from the cells the degenerative disease can be reversed. The cellular walls of the arteries degenerate due to chemicals and excess minerals, causing a buildup of plaque that restricts the flow of blood carrying oxygen to the heart and other parts of the body. Some researchers have compared the buildup to that of a sewer pipe, and the chelation therapy to that of a Roto-Rooter. While it is not exactly like that, such description may aid in describing what takes place.

The acid (ethylene diamine tetra-acetic)

"Bypass the

in chelation therapy was developed in Germany for the treatment of metal poisoning. It is used in the United States and approved by the Food and Drug Administration for the same purpose.

The acid is mixed with suitable solution and given by standard intravenous method. It usually takes about four hours for each treatment. If taken too fast, it will give you a burning sensation at point of injection. In 1986 I had 29 treatments and have had four more since that time. After treatment number four, my angina pains were gone and I could and did the work that I was ever able to do when I was young. While under treatment I sat in an easy chair, read books or talked to other patients with similar problems and heard their testimony of the beneficial results it had on them.

In one particular case involving a doctor that had two bypass surgeries and needed another one but could not stand the operation, following chelation therapy he discarded his wheelchair and was going back into practice. It was a shame that he did not know of chelation therapy before he had the first bypass surgery. It could have saved him much pain, grief and thousands of dollars.

It is reported that chelation therapy will work about 80 percent of the time. In my case, I knew that I was in the 80-percent group after only four treatments. The cost of my treatments at that time was $55 each. How does that compare to bypass surgery, or a glorious funeral?

Heart disease has been a major killer for a number of years, yet it was essentially unknown 60 years ago. What has happened during this period of time to bring about this dreaded disease?

NOW FOR MY OPINION!

Heart disease increased with the introduction of oleomargarine, hydrogenated oils, homogenized milk, and other synthetic products. When people consumed natural oils and fats, heart disease was unknown. What is your opinion?

The Poet Warrior:

— One Sovereign's Battle for Freedom —

David Van Pelt fancies himself a 20th century "Braveheart."

The Colorado native, who lives atop a mountain surrounded by national forest west of Colorado Springs, was inspired by the movie starring Mel Gibson as Scotsman William Wallace, a real-life historical figure who led his countrymen to battle the English for freedom in the 13th century.

Part resister, all patriot, Van Pelt's gregarious personality and studied knowledge of the Constitution may well propel him to the forefront of the growing sovereign movement. He has spent the past six months shedding "contracts" with what he passionately believes is an oppressive and illegal government, from his birth certificate to his Social Security card.

Van Pelt recently was interviewed over short-wave radio, where he was encouraged to run for public office. In June he was elected an alternate juror representing Colorado on the Common Law Grand Jury that gathered in Wichita, Kan. to deliberate on the president's use of Emergency War Powers.

Van Pelt, 37, drives around in a car with homemade license plates that simply read "CITIZEN." He has no car insurance, his car is not registered and he doesn't carry a state-issued driver's license.

He says he doesn't need any of them. The Constitution already guarantees the right to travel freely, he says. Van Pelt he believes protects his common-law rights.

Van Pelt said that if he should eventually get his car booted, he will likely cut the contraption off.

Under the common law to which Van Pelt subscribes, there are only two stone-solid rules: He must not willingly harm his fellow human beings, and he must honor with his life all contracts that he enters into.

Law enforcement agencies currently do not maintain records concerning sovereigns detained on traffic or other violations. But officials across many parts of the country are perplexed by an increase in the number of citizens who are shedding their car licenses and registrations in the name of freedom.

A semi-retired electronics repairman, Van Pelt said he has not filed an income-tax report with the IRS for several years. He regularly lectures on sovereign citizenship, and sells a manual on how to "legally" stop paying income taxes. Surprisingly, law enforcers have largely left him alone.

However, Van Pelt recently appeared in court to answer separate charges of speeding and attempting to smuggle a concealed weapon into a courthouse. Regarding the weapons charge, Van Pelt said he was on his way to the law library housed inside a Colorado Springs courthouse when officers confiscated his hairbrush, which had a secret compartment containing a 4-inch plastic knife.

Van Pelt subsequently appeared in municipal court, which he believes has no jurisdiction over him. He thus declined to enter a plea or sign any documents.

The judge told Van Pelt the court was not obligated to prove its jurisdiction, and urged him to hire an attorney. The self-described "non-defendant" responded that he had no intention of securing a lawyer.

The American Bar Association is a

"private labor organization, and I don't want to know their secret handshake," he said.

Van Pelt was found guilty and fined $50, which he said he will likely not pay.

Regarding the speeding ticket, Van Pelt again challenged the court to prove its jurisdiction. "My rights are given to me by God and they are protected by this book here," he told the judge, waving his constitutional law book.

But the judge claimed the city had jurisdiction because Van Pelt was driving through the city limits, and entered for him a plea of not guilty.

"I refuse for you to dole out my rights.

You've presumed power of attorney over me," Van Pelt protested. "I don't want my rights from you — I already have them."

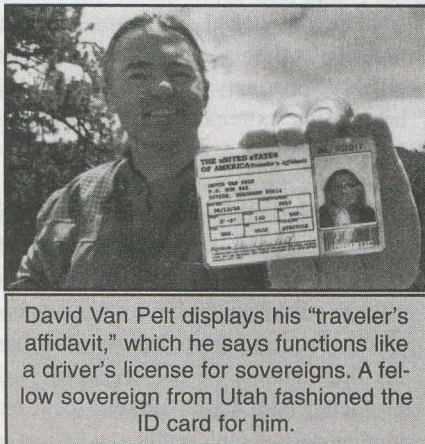

Van Pelt's lively account of his court appearance for the concealed knife appeared in the May issue of Patriot Magazine. He describes his battle against the government as one that has empowered him, and yes, truly freed him.

The government "is not just going to fall over-night. There's going to be back-lashing and finger-pointing and a little bit of squabbling and maybe some fighting. But the choke hold that the federal government has over us will become smaller and smaller and less and less powerful and more manageable, and then we can decide as a republic how much power we want the federal government to have," he said.

Land of The Free— Not!

In these United States you do not have freedom of choice when it comes to helping yourself against disease such as cancer, heart disease, arthritis and AIDS. Your choices are limited by laws and regulations.

For example, if you were to discover a non-toxic herbal recipe in your attic that your great-grandmother used to cure just about everything, so you tried it and it worked—you could not suggest that your neighbor try it for his cancer or arthritis without running the risk of being charged with a felony. It has come to that!

The conflict between the powerful scions of established and institutionalized medicine and anyone who would seek to treat disease and establish health with alternative ideas is essentially a political and economic conflict. Despite the propaganda, it is not a “scientific” controversy.

Neither reason nor science play as powerful a role as do politics and economics. Dr. Benjamin Rush, a signer of the Declaration of Independence and a Founding Father, argued fervently, but to no avail, to have health and medical freedom outlined in the Bill of Rights along with speech and religious freedoms. He argued that if such a freedom were left off the list of inalienable rights, a particular school of medicine would eventually come to power and suppress others to the detriment of the people.

How right he was.

Special interests carefully cultivated today’s “legal” medical establishment—replete with the AMA, the “accredited” medical schools, the pharmaceutical cartel and government bureaucracies in the area of food and drugs. And, if they could have their way, only the tenets of “allopathic” medicine would be recognized by federal and state law, making all practicing of medicine under any other philosophies a felony. It is almost to that stage, but a widespread rebellion seems to be making some inroads for freedom. Some states have passed health and medical freedom laws in the past two years.

Allopathic medicine is the name for the kind of medicine we’re all used to—allopathy is the practice of diagnosing specifics, then treating the symptoms with powerful, toxic drugs, or by surgically removing specific parts, or by using some dangerous high-tech radiation devices. Allopathy chooses to ignore underlying causes of disease that cannot respond to the dangerous therapies. For example, medical schools virtually ignore nutrition as they teach young physicians how to diagnose, administer drugs, cut away parts or irradiate cells.

Allopathy is the supporting philosophy beneath today’s institutionalized medical/pharmaceutical juggernaut.

Historically, surgeons have long been the core group of allopaths, followed later by purveyors of wonder drugs. People want quick relief of symptoms, so allopathy with its surgical removals and numbing pills became very popular, and “M.D.” became an extremely prestigious set of initials, signifying wealth and power over life and death.

But the allopathic monopoly fails utterly against chronic and metabolic diseases such as cancer, heart disease, arthritis, diabetes, multiple sclerosis, back pain and so forth. In such diseases as these, the degeneration of the organism is the problem, and since surgery can only remove parts it isn’t really any help at all. Despite this, open-heart surgery remains the most glamorous and the biggest money maker in heart disease.

Nor have drugs been effective. Viruses and bacteria are not generally the cause of metabolic diseases—malnutrition and toxins are the cause. The cancer and heart disease death-rate statistics today prove allopathic medicine's failure.

Alternative physicians such as naturopaths, homeopaths, acupuncturists, chiropractors and so forth concentrate on the whole person rather than the symptom—they are also often the target of the medical establishment's thought police from the Food and Drug Administration, the Department of Public Health and various state health agencies, as well as the medical associations and the licensing boards.

Alternative physicians are trying to find a way to return robust health to the organism. Therefore, prescribing quality nutrition is the foundation of most alternative thinking. This is primarily why vitamins and dietary supplements have been suppressed for decades by the FDA on behalf of the medical monopoly.

And yet, there are those who deny that any sort of "conspiracy" exists to maintain the status quo.

As an investigative journalist, I have had considerable experience with the suppressive medical monopoly. Nearly 30 years ago (1966), I wrote my first series questioning the cancer establishment—a series about how Laetrile had cured a local man of "proven" terminal colon cancer. I was personally attacked by the cancer establishment as "a sports writer who thinks he is a doctor." This patently absurd criticism quickly taught me that the medical orthodoxy had no reasonable or scientific criticism of alternatives to offer, they could only smear. Since that time I have visited more alternative medical clinics and spoken with more alternative physicians than any other journalist working the beat today.

I've just completed a major book, an anthology of the key stories about health I've written over the past decade. This book is backed by my 30 years of experience as an investigative journalist, and people can use it as a personal guide to living longer and healthier lives through the next century.

For example, I have told the story of the only research on what occurs in the human body after eating food cooked in a microwave oven. It's not a healthy picture, but it's approved by the medical and food monopoly. The same monopoly, incidentally, that wants to bring you more irradiated foods, growth hormones in your dairy products and genetically manipulated Frankenstein foods.

I've learned what really happened to robust health and why we have the most expensive, sorriest national health statistics of the modern world. It's not the fault of "progress," it's the fault of those who twist the facts of science in order to capitalize on technological trends, even where there are inherent dangers. Widespread spraying of pesticides on food crops, which are malnourished by chemical fertilizers, is one example.

It doesn't seem to matter to the politically connected that our soils are depleted so badly that our basic foods are virtually void of nutrition. How can we be healthy eating worthless junk?

Advocating organic foods and dietary supplements, on the other hand, has been attacked by the myrmidons of the medical establishment as quackery. This makes no scientific sense, but the food and drug industries have all the clout, and they call most of the shots when it comes to published research in their own "peer reviewed" journals. This is an important message that needs to get out. People who are not robustly healthy are more easily manipulated by mattoids in high places.

The new anthology tells you everything you'll need to know to overcome all the pollutions, the denaturing of our foods and, of course, the crooked politics of chronic illness.

In fact, the tide may already be turning. The allopathic monopoly cannot withstand the light of truth, and writers like me must be encouraged and supported so that we never weaken our resolve.

Dear Sir:

Thank you for the civics lesson. We at Media Bypass magazine published a story in our August issue that seems to be of some interest to the House Committee on Banking and Financial Services in the House of Representatives, of which you are the chairman.

Official House security badge

Indeed, the story entitled "Fostergate," by James R. Norman, a senior editor at Forbes magazine, has created quite a stir on Capitol Hill. Several members of the House and Senate have contacted our editorial offices and provided us with their Federal Express account numbers to receive copies of Media Bypass overnight. As we are a small news magazine, in just our third year of publication, we appreciate the attention.

The purpose of this letter is to request an explanation from your office regarding the conduct of your counsel, Mr. R. Stephen Ganis. We have a number of questions concerning this attorney's interference and inquiries about "Fostergate."

1) As the attached letter indicates, on Friday, 14 July, at 1026 CST, Mr. Ganis requested and received a faxed copy of the above-mentioned article, after contacting our office and indicating that your committee was investigating allegations concerning ALLTEL Information Services, Inc., known formerly as Systematics, and its' alleged involvement in illegal money-laundering, according to Mr. Ganis. An audiotape of Mr. Ganis' initial inquiry to our office is available upon request.

Question: We have subsequently learned, and Mr. Ganis has indeed confirmed, in a taped interview, that he had a copy of the "Fostergate" article over six weeks prior to requesting a copy from us. James R. Norman also confirms that Ganis was provided a copy of the article in May. Why did he need another copy from us?

2) Mr. Ganis now has admitted in a taped telephone conversation and in a taped conversation in our editorial office that "within a couple hours" of receiving our faxed prepublication release of the "Fostergate" article, he contacted Mr. Charles O. Morgan, a libel attorney retained by ALLTEL Services, personally advising him of our intent to publish the article. Audiotapes of this phone call and face-to-face interview are available upon request.

Mr. Ganis:

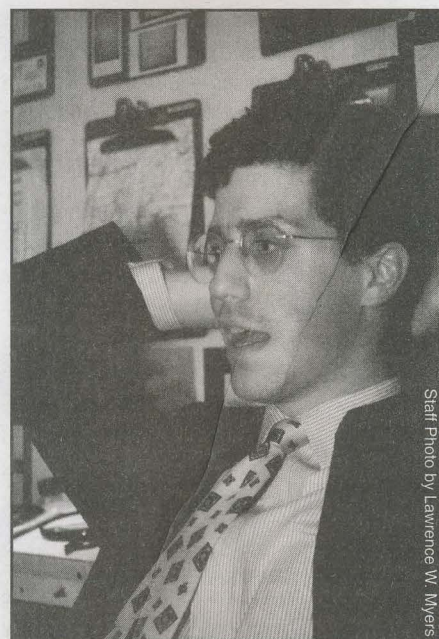

As per your request and Mr. Norman's authority, we are faxing the following documents to your attention:

- 1.) White House Query Letter From Forbes
- 2.) Prepublication release of Norman article "Fostergate".

Off the record, we can also confirm that since Forbes declined to run Mr. Norman's piece, Media Bypass has indeed published this article in our August 1995 edition, which is expected to be en-route to our subscribers by Friday, 14 July, 1995. //MYERS//END//

Question: Why would an attorney, who represents your office and claims to be investigating a company, then admit to "tip-ping off" the attorney for that firm, thus warning him that the company supposedly under investigation is about to get some bad publicity from a little magazine in Evansville, Ind.? And why not contact their corporate attorney, instead of the counsel specifically retained to kill this story before it gets into print?

And exactly why did Mr. Ganis not contact Morgan six weeks earlier, when he admits he had the story in his possession?

As it turns out, we had some printing problems and were unable to ship our magazines on the day Mr. Ganis received our "confidential" and "off the record" advisory. He did indeed have a "prepublication release" of an article, which he then informs a well known libel attorney is about to be published. For more information about Mr. Morgan's aggressive actions on behalf of his client, see the July 4 front page of the Washington Post.

Mr. Morgan, a very skilled attorney, had managed to stop the release of the "Fostergate" story until Media Bypass ran with it in our August edition.

3) Although Mr. Morgan has been very thoughtful and polite in his dealings with us here at Media Bypass, he acknowledges in a recorded telephone conversation that a "confidential informant" told him about our magazine's intent to publish the article, and he also acknowledges having contact with your Mr. Ganis.

Within days of releasing the article to Mr. Ganis, we received a five-page threat letter from Mr. Morgan warning us not to publish the article. We advised Mr. Morgan that by this time (21 August), we had already printed and shipped the magazine. We faxed a copy of "Fostergate" to him, and express mailed several copies of Media Bypass to his office. We are still waiting to hear from Mr. Morgan.

Question: Why is a libel attorney, representing a company ostensibly under investigation by your committee apparently using your own attorney as a "confidential informant"? Furthermore, why is your attorney and his investigator, Greg Wierzynski, engaging in chatter on the Internet concerning this "investigation," including making malicious claims about the credibility of Mr. Norman's sources on this story? (See Grabbe postings)

4) Being simple-minded midwestern folks, even after his compromising conduct, we consented to a visit by Mr. Ganis at our editorial office yesterday. We took him out to our favorite Chinese restaurant for lunch, and discussed the "Fostergate" story in detail.

Mr. Ganis came here to learn our sources on this story. But after reading the Internet postings, and learning of his contacts with Mr. Morgan, quite simply, our sources did not wish to see Mr. Ganis. Even after numerous conference calls with James Norman, who indeed feels betrayed by Mr. Ganis, and with a key source developed by our firm, no one will now assist your committee in getting to the bottom of this case, unless and until you explain the conduct of your counsel in this matter.

Indeed, Mr. Ganis was transported to the airport with no information on our sources at all, because he has single-handedly alienated a number of key sources in this story. He claims to have graduated from Harvard School of Law ("Class of 1992"), and further claims to have been employed in some capacity with the Securities and Exchange Commission; nonetheless, we are puzzled by his peculiar behavior.

Although we had a good visit with your lawyer, Mr. Congressman, traveling halfway across the country to "go out for Chinese" seems a bit extravagant, even on a Washington salary. We await your explanation concerning this matter, at your earliest convenience.

Since Fostergate...

BY LAWRENCE W. MYERS

"Smoking Gun"

James R. Norman reports that according to sources close to the Starr investigation, Deborah Gorham, Vince Foster's secretary, told investigator Mark Touhey in May 1995 that on the day before he died, Foster received a document from Webster Hubbell relating to Systematics. That document disappeared from Foster's office after his death. An investigator has also given this information to Bill Hamilton of Inslaw, corroborating claims made by the source in Touhey's office.

Public vs. Private Testimony

According to a deposition given privately to the Senate Banking Committee prior to her public testimony at the Whitewater committee hearings in July, Debra Gorham stated that Vincent Foster, before his death, gave her two one-inch-thick National Security Agency files to put in his safe, which was located in Bernard Nussbaum's office.

According to transcripts of her testimony, investigators declined to ask follow-up questions concerning Foster's NSA role. This sworn testimony was not revealed to the committee in public hearings, although it will probably be revealed in the final report, unless the testimony is heavily redacted.

During her televised testimony, however, Gorham was never asked about the NSA documents, and when asked by Sen. Faircloth if she had ever seen documents related to Systematics, Inslaw, or BCCI, after reading a note handed to her from her attorney, David Mills, she responded "I don't recall,"

"On the Trail"

According to a former instructor at the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center, (FLETC), with extensive connections with senior criminal investigators and case managers at the IRS Washington D.C. office, Vince Foster was under surveillance by the IRS at the time of his death, due to allegations of money laundering.

"Scare The Messenger"

According to James R. Norman, Insight Magazine, published by the Washington Times, reports they declined to print the "Fostergate" article after being warned that "national security" was at stake. Norman told us that according to Insight Editor Paul Rodrigues, his office was visited by a "plain clothes" military intelligence officer from the Pentagon who privately advised him to "lay off the [Fostergate] story, you don't know what you're dealing with."

The officer further revealed that Norman's article would have an adverse impact on U.S. national security. Rodrigues continues to independently corroborate the story, and has confirmed from other sources that Foster was indeed under investigation at the time of his death, but has been told that it concerned money laundering, not espionage.

"Fire The Messenger"

Noted journalists Anthony Kimerly and Sarah McClendon, whose thoughts on the Fostergate case are printed in the pages of this month's magazine have been fired or lost contracts over their coverage of the story. According to Publisher Jim Thomas, any and all journalists of this caliber who have a story "spiked" over the Foster case can expect an opportunity and an invitation to have their work featured in the pages of Media Bypass.

"OPERATION ACHILLES HEEL"

Exposing Allegations of Racism, Rape, and Drug Abuse Among "Redneck Rogues" in Federal Law Enforcement

Editor's Note: More than two years after the siege and slaughter at Waco, the new Republican majority in the House of Representatives overcame the objections of the Clinton administration and held congressional hearings to determine the truth about the violent deaths of American men, women and children at the hands of federal law enforcement officers inside a church in central Texas.

More than three years after an FBI sniper slaughtered a young mother holding her infant child on the porch of her plywood shack in rural Idaho, Congress has yet to consider the case.

Eight days after federal agents were identified in a 5-year-old amateur videotape making insensitive and inappropriate comments about minorities, the directors of the FBI, ATF, Department of Justice and DEA were called on the carpet of the U.S. Senate to answer allegations of drinking off duty and making racial slurs.

This is the story about how it happened.

How this story could happen—where a country considers what a man in the government thinks, but ignores what he does, is left for the reader to decide...

It started out as an unsubstantiated rumor among state militia groups throughout the Midwest, according to the folks who were there from the start. Whispered at gun shows and coffee shops and posted anonymously on computer bulletin boards, the often repeated story was that state and local law enforcement agencies were warning their officers to avoid attending a police oriented picnic held each year on Mother's Day weekend in the hills of East Tennessee.

Rumor central further revealed that "internal memos" from at least two metropolitan police agencies warned their personnel that the weekend bash included drug use, drunken brawls, nude dancing and other alleged misconduct considered "unbecoming of a law officer." The event, called a "roundup," reportedly included federal agents.

From there, the story took on a life of its own. After allegations of racism surfaced in connection with the event, various shortwave radio and computer-based fax networks for militia and patriot groups in the United States quietly announced that any and all information about the "roundup" was considered "high priority intelligence" for the growing movement, according to postings on the Internet last winter.

"Political Payback"

Most of the high profile militia units in the United States are less than two years old. How the various emerging constitutional fundamentalist, freemen, militia and patriot groups developed a relatively sophisticated information collection and sharing capability in the last 12 months has drawn interest from the news media and law enforcement.

Although the "movement" has its share of charlatans and conspiracy theorists, the reality is that a number of groups conduct community-based advocacy, political activism and information exchanges with great proficiency.

Washington has certainly noticed. "The political clout of the emerging patriot community was focused and considerable in defeating a number of liberal Democrats last year," according to Larry Pratt, executive director of Gun Owners of America (GOA).

The gun rights lobby was and is very much under fire in the press after the November 1994 national elections. At the expense and embarrassment of many entrenched leftist leaders, conservative, pro-gun candidates achieved an unprecedented sweep of both houses of Congress. According to Pratt, the national media is still looking for someone to blame. Identifying the ideology of change in 1994 as the rantings of Rush and the wrath of angry white men, virtually every post-election statement from the conservative right generally continues to be labeled "extremist" and "divisive" in the mainstream press. And the militia movement in particular has been taking it on the chin.

After extensive media coverage in late 1994 referencing reports from the Anti-Defamation League (ADL) and the Southern Poverty Law Center (SPLC) claiming that American militia activity was associated with racist hate groups and white supremacy, many of the various Second Amendment organizations started studying these so-called "civil rights groups" and began sharing information among state organizations about them. As a result of these inquiries, for example, all available 1995 issues of the SPLC "KlanWatch Intelligence Report" have been available on the Internet for more than six months now, although the report is clearly labeled "confidential" and supposedly shipped exclusively to law enforcement agencies.

As these fledgling activist groups began surfing the Net and setting up message lines, newsletters and clandestine radio stations, the militias established linkage between their own expanding military-style intelligence units and the rest of the patriot community. Late last winter, the federal police picnic rumor was explored with great interest.

The first useful "tip" arrived unexpectedly in mid-February 1995, when a low-level BATF employee anonymously advised Kay Shiel, a Special Operations lieutenant and public information officer in the 51st Missouri Militia, that an ATF sponsored "Good O Boys Roundup" was indeed scheduled to be held this year on 19-21 May at a campsite near Ocoee, Tenn.

In a recent interview, Shiel indicated that her source is not an agent with the ATF, but instead is employed by the agency in a capacity that allows the individual to hear gossip and small talk at a number of ATF offices throughout the Midwest. "Although we don't get any criminal case information, this person has been helpful in telling us about the social habits of several agents in the ATF," she said.

Contrary to media reports, women tend to play a surprisingly prominent

Over 200 Militias and Support Groups Operate Nationwide

Alabama Bombing Suspects Linked to Michigan Militia

At least 200 militias and their support groups—40 with ties to neo-Nazi and other white supremacist organizations—are active in 30 states. Michigan, home to the Michigan Militia where neo-Nazis in the April 19 Oklahoma City bombing recently attended meetings, leads the nation with 30 militias and support groups. California is second with 20, and Alabama and Colorado are third with 15 each. Missouri and Texas are fourth with 14 each and Florida has 13. (See list on page 7 and map on page 10)

Militias and support groups with racist ties are prominent in 32 states, up from nine states in 1994. The militia movement is very fluid. New groups form and others disappear on a weekly basis. The character of these groups also may change rapidly as different factions—some extreme with neo-Nazi ties and others moderate with only low-shouting goals—vie for control. Many militia leaders and members may not be aware that their militia colleagues have links to the white supremacist movement.

State Lawsuits Can Shut Down Militias

41 States Currently Have Laws Applicable to Militias of Paramilitary Activity

Police and prosecutors in most states have limited authority to order their citizens to disarm. In at least 41 states, however, laws exist that prohibit the use of force to intimidate others in public violence. At the Southern Poverty Law Center's successful suit of state statutes in the past, these laws are effective in curbing paramilitary training exercises that pose a public safety threat against the growing number of militias.

There are two types of state laws applicable to militia activity. Antimilitia laws, which are the most sweeping, prohibit the use of force to intimidate others in public violence. These laws ban all paramilitary organizations, regardless of whether they are violent. Antimilitia laws prohibit paramilitary training exercises that pose a public safety threat against the growing number of militias.

role in the constitutionist community. Shiel called Stephanie Birmingham, commander of the Chattanooga, Tenn., cell of the Gadsden Militia, the following morning.

After consulting with others in her group, Birmingham said the information-collection enterprise "went secure," meaning no further mention of the event was made on any of the various communications mediums in the patriot community, while disinformation was simultaneously put out that the initial and often repeated rumor of the Tennessee gathering was a hoax and probably a law enforcement provocation.

Birmingham declined to reveal details regarding how they killed the rumor, but intelligence information was indeed much more aggressively collected after the location and date of the event was established, she said.

Within days, encoded messages, using PGP encryption software, were sent along the Internet to various militia units across the country requesting more information about the event, which now had a date, location and name. The BATF "Good O Boys" roundup became a subject of intense, though clandestine, interest in a three-state area.

In rural northeast Alabama, the idea of a well-armed citizenry is not particularly new. Virtually every child is taught to accurately fire a rifle before reaching junior high school. Successful deer and small-game hunting is a rite of passage. The term "gun control" is generally defined as the ability to hit a small target at a long distance.

Military service is an equally honored family tradition in this part of the country. Alabama has several military installations throughout the state. The terrain changes from the tropical southern sands of the Gulf of Mexico to the Delta region of the upper west and the mountains of the north. For rigorously training American soldiers, the state is a commander's dream.

Another type of military unit also exercises in Alabama. Just a few miles down the road from Fort McClellan, where the U.S. Army trains military police and the ATF trains its agents in paramilitary action, a growing underground guerrilla warfare unit, known as the Gadsden Minutemen, has become one of the federal government's worst nightmares.

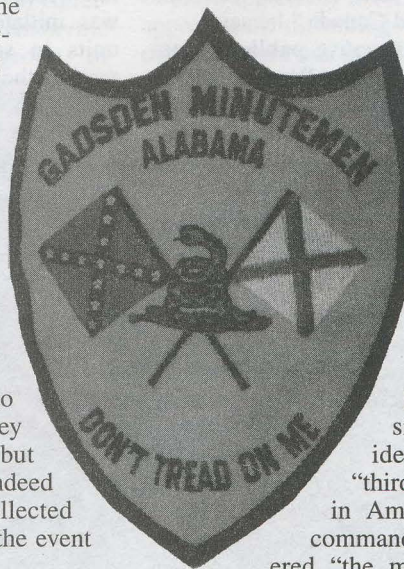

In March, Jeff Randall, a former Attalla, Ala., police officer and current commander of the 500-member Gadsden Minutemen, took Birmingham's report to several of his staff and decided to act on the information. First, he traveled to Missouri to meet with the intelligence unit of the 51st. After verifying the validity of the information and the qualifications of the informant, Randall said he began asking for assistance among his associates in law enforcement about the roundup.

Randall's battalion-sized unit is identified as the "third largest militia in America" and its commander is considered "the most dangerous man in Alabama," according to the Southern Poverty Law Center's Militia Task Force. The FBI says this group's underground intelligence unit is "one of the best in the country."

Arguably, if you are a government law enforcement agent, there is indeed much to fear from the Gadsden Minutemen. They consider the FBI and the ATF part of the "secret police."

The record shows that these unconventional warriors have already shot and incapacitated at least two dozen federal agents in their first year of operation. Their favorite "calibers" are 8mm VHS and 35mm Kodak.

Within weeks of exchanging encrypted Internet postings and late night telephone inquiries, Randall eventually made contact with a retired Alabama state law enforcement officer who was not only familiar with the now notorious roundup, he had actually attended four of the last five annual events.

After building trust and rapport with Randall over several meetings, the officer also revealed that he had a videotape of the 1990 roundup and dozens of color photographs of federal agents consuming moonshine, ridiculing minorities and raising hell in the Tennessee woods.

The officer, a 20-year veteran robbery and homicide detective with several agencies, has requested anonymity. He will be identified as "George" throughout this article. In an interview with Media Bypass in July, he related the history of the ATF-sponsored event.

"The roundup was and is common knowledge among various federal law enforcement officers nationwide. Several state and metropolitan police units who work with these federal agencies in an undercover or task force capacity are also invited to the event, which often times involves between three and four hundred agents and officers from the United States and Canada," he said.

With all the negative publicity from the far left, and in the aftermath of the Oklahoma City bombing, where every conservative cause across America was blamed for contributing to the blast, a developing rumor substantiated into facts about racist federal agents was "too good to pass up," according to Mike Kemp, the communications officer and second in command of the Gadsden Minutemen.

Randall said he and others in his unit decided to determine if the roundup was as incredible as the video and the stories from his source suggested. Sometime in late April, "Operation Achilles Heel" was initiated by a coalition of militia units in several states, although primarily the 51st in Missouri and the Gadsden units in Alabama and Tennessee.

The plan was simple. Somehow attending the event and catching drunken federal agents in their natural element on film was the main objective. George played a key part in getting Randall an invitation to attend.

Randall and his new source did indeed attend the ATF roundup on 19 May 1995. They shot several dozen photographs, many of which are published here for the first time. His group released the photos, the 1990 video and various pieces of racist paraphernalia gleaned from the roundup or kept by George over the years, to the Washington Times in July.

Within days, George was interviewed on the G. Gordon Liddy program (with his voice disguised) and on a number of national news broadcasts. Both Randall and his communications officer Mike Kemp did most of the radio, television and newspaper interviews, along with Tennessee coverage from Birmingham.

With perhaps the most impressive mass media campaign in the history of the movement under his belt, Randall remains philosophical about the cost of the operation. He has indicated that the price of providing the exposure has been high, both financially and personally for most of his primary staff. They have not collected any funds from the public to recoup the cost to cover all of the telephone, express mail, photo processing, travel and legal expenses the Minutemen have incurred, he said.

"We were never in this to make a dime out of the exposure," he said. "We are a small group of men and women who worked hard to bring this scandal into the public eye. We spent a lot of time, money and resources on this operation and we would do it all again," he added.

When the national media examined the damaging physical evidence of the secret ATF "Good O Boys Roundup" party, where racist literature was openly distributed, cruel anti-black skits and t-shirts were displayed and felony charges of drug use and gang rape have now been made against some of the participants, the days of the BATF may indeed be numbered, according to several congressional lobbyists. "They have no friends on the Hill," said Pratt of GOA. "Unlike the FBI, the ATF has had serious public-relations problems for years."

Damaging Evidence of Institutional Racism

Several federal agencies are now investigating the disclosures made by the Minutemen and the evidence presented by the now dozens of law officers who have acknowledged attending the roundup over the past 15 years. In a sworn affidavit to the U.S. Justice Department, dated 21 July 1995, George provided details about the ATF's activities never before disclosed in the national media. His sworn statement to investigators includes a number of disturbing allegations about the ATF roundup.

According to the affidavit, George identifies several state and federal agencies known to participate in the event. "I attended the roundup each year between 1989 and 1992. At the roundup, in various years, I observed personnel from the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA), U.S. Secret Service, Immigration and Naturalization Service, as well as personnel from various state police agencies, including Maryland, Georgia, North and South Carolina, Mississippi, as well as major metropolitan police departments, including Atlanta, Georgia, and Birmingham, Alabama. [Also] among the attendees were agents from the Canadian [RCMP] Morals Unit (Vice)."

The ATF's "Knoxville Mob"

During an interview with the Department of Justice on 27 July, George further revealed the nature of the racist "security procedures" at the roundup for investigators. The Knoxville office of the ATF, which roundup organizer Gene Rightmyer once commanded, is "notorious for its cowboy image," according to a federal law enforcement source with another agency who is familiar with the agents at this post of duty.

According to George, armed off-duty members of the Knoxville ATF were responsible for securing the area with yellow "crime scene" tape several days prior to the event, as well as having the responsibility of checking identification, issuing color-coded wrist bands and guarding the check points at the entry of the roundup each year.

According to the Criminal Intelligence Unit (CIU) of the Knoxville Police Department, this group of Knoxville ATF agents have developed their undercover careers by posing as "Outlaw bikers" in order to penetrate various under-world targets in East Tenn. Knoxville ATF also has a reputation for penetrating certain racist organizations. One of their agents posed as an "Outlaw biker" in early October 1991 and attempted to sell dynamite to a neo-Nazi group in order to arrest its leadership in a reverse-sting operation. The case was closed after the operation was revealed in the press. A criminal intelligence officer said that the ATF has a "plausible cover" acting as racist bikers in East Tennessee, especially in Knoxville. There is an Outlaw Motorcycle Club chapter on the east side of the city, he said.

"The Knoxville unit is known within the ATF and federal law enforcement as 'the mob,'" according to George. Some of these apparently notorious agents also appear in the disturbing "biker photo" in our centerfold this month.

The overtly racist attitude of the Knoxville ATF "mob" was almost legendary at the roundup, according to George. The affidavit states, "When I first arrived at the roundup in 1989, I went to the check-in point which was manned primarily by BATF agents. This check point had several signs posted, such as 'No Niggers Allowed' and 'Nigger Deposit Point.' These signs remained posted during the entire event."

(Retired agent Rightmyer claims through his attorney that the "Nigger Check Point" signs were only up for a short time in 1989 and 1990 and that he ordered them taken down. His version is inconsistent with the affidavit and statements by several other officers who attended the roundup both years).

The affidavit further states, "The check-in point also had an effigy or dummy of a black person hanging from a tree. This effigy remained at the check-in point throughout the event. Moreover, ATF agents and other law enforcement officers would surround each vehicle as it approached [the roundup entry], stop it and rock the vehicle while shouting, 'Got any niggers in that car?'"

George also indicated in his statement that the ATF sponsored "Ugliest Redneck of the Year" and "Redneck of the Year" competitions, which typically included a "racist comedy club...with racist epithets and slurs, mostly aimed at blacks. BATF SAC Gene Rightmyer observed all of this activity and took no action to stop it," according to the affidavit.

George made a videotape of the 1990 roundup with the "Nigger Check Point" sign and states in his affidavit that he observed a poster of a "black person with an ax through their head" among other racist signs and paraphernalia, including anti-black t-shirts and "Federal Nigger Hunting Licenses" and various pieces of white supremacy literature.

At the 1992 roundup, according to the affidavit, the winner of the "Redneck of the Year" award went to several agents who put on a skit on a makeshift stage where they smashed a watermelon to the ground, pulled out a black baby doll and proclaimed the skit "The Birth of The Black Race." This presentation was finished up with a nude strip show and then a demonstration by a retired Washington, D.C., homicide detective with an apparent proficiency in urinating a great distance, George said.

Drug and alcohol use has now been reported to the Department of Justice by a number of attendees. ATF agents from the Atlanta office allegedly were consuming and "distributing homemade moonshine" which George states he has a photograph from the 1992 event.

"Memories of Waco"

In a series of interviews with Media Bypass, both in person and over the telephone, George provided other details about the roundup.

"When I arrived at the 1993 event, there was a large color photograph of an ATF 'Good O Boy' from last year's roundup. His photo was posted on a tree at the ATF check point because he was not going to be at the '93 roundup. The man was one of four ATF agents killed during the first day of the raid on the Branch Davidian compound at Waco," he said.

George and other sources also provided Media Bypass with a number of t-shirts issued by Rightmyer and friends at various roundups, including the 1992 shirt which features a naked ATF agent riding on top of a Polk County, Tenn., Sheriff's Department cruiser, an apparent reference to an incident which occurred at the 1991 event, and a "Pocket Nigger" t-shirt, designed by ATF agents and distributed during the 1992 roundup as well, George said. (See photos.)

"Small World"

The popularity of the roundup among various police agencies nationwide can be demonstrated in other ways. According to an amateur video made in Washington, D.C., this spring, during Janet Reno's dedication ceremony of a law enforcement memorial, New York City police officers terrorized several hotels by drinking and brawling and vandalizing the facilities while running naked through the halls. One of the rowdy drunken officers can be seen wearing a "Good O Boys" t-shirt in the portion of the videotape broadcast in May on CNN.

Since releasing the video and other evidence of the roundup, the Gadsden Minutemen have been under intense media scrutiny and under subpoena by the U.S. Department of Justice. They are cooperating with authorities, as is their informant, George, who says his motives for participating in exposing the federal law enforcement event is primarily due to his long years of experience as a detective dealing with the frequently violent "band of thugs known as the ATF..." These people have been out of control for over two decades. They lie in court, entrap, brutalize and harass ordinary citizens and bring a great deal of shame to the profession of law enforcement."

George is cooperating with Michael Hubbard of the Department of Justice's Office of The Inspector General and has agreed to turn over all documents and information to him. He has also offered to take a polygraph to verify his statements. The investigation is expected to be completed sometime this fall.

The Department of Justice and IRS Hackers "Uncover The Coverup"

Rightmyer has been subpoenaed by Congress and the Justice Department. He refused to respond to the Senate Judiciary committee, according to Sen. Orrin Hatch's office.

When served with a search warrant, Rightmyer allegedly claimed that his computer database of all the "Good O Boy" federal and state agents who have attended the event over the past 15 years was deleted after he was advised of the and retrieved all of the data allegedly deleted, according to the U.S. Attorney's office. Rightmyer said in an interview in his attorney's office in July that the FBI, Secret Service and other agencies can expect to be implicated in the scandal along with the ATF.

Just Between "Good O Boys"

Testimony reveals that ATF Operations in Washington knew about the improper activities of the roundup, at least as early as 1987. Furthermore, it attempted to distance itself from Rightmyer's private gathering in the Tennessee hills.

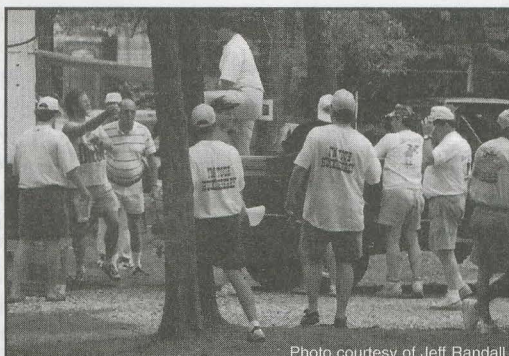

In fact, according to documents obtained from his personnel file under the Freedom of Information Act, Rightmyer was reprimanded in 1987 for using ATF stationary and ATF offices and phone numbers to organize the roundup and collect the $75 to $90 fee from those invited to attend.

Yet, a 1993 "brochure" produced by Rightmyer still includes the address and phone number for the ATF's Greenville office. This invitation also includes warnings to all attendees not to fight at the event, not to bring underage females or talk to the news media about what happens at the roundup. The text states, "No Press, No Press Releases", no discussion of what goes on at the roundup, "...except between 'Good O Boys.'"

Where is Jesse Jackson?

Outrage from the civil rights community about the roundup has been somewhat subdued. Morris Dees of the SPLC, for example, told the New York Times that the current roundup video released by the Minutemen "was doctored...a photograph of the [nigger check point] sign taken in 1990 was doctored into the video."

Nor did any outraged comments come initially from the NAACP concerning the event, fied they were specifically prohibited from attending the roundup.

Perhaps, not surprisingly, most of the negative publicity from the mainstream media concerning this incident has been applied equally to the ATF and the militia movement. Furthermore, although they failed to publicly announce it, certain civil rights groups have acknowledged that they have known about the ATF event and its racist undertones for years.

For example, the ADL & the SPLC collect a great deal of intelligence about racist gatherings and activities by setting up postal "mail drops" under fictitious names to receive racist books, newsletters and pamphlets from the various factions of the white supremacy movement, which, by all accounts, is a rather literature-intensive activity.

Indeed, a front-page article about the law enforcement roundup was printed in the July 1992 edition of the David Duke newspaper, the National Association for the Advancement of White People (NAAWP) News.

even when it was established that minorities in the agency had given sworn statements in an anti-discrimination lawsuit against the ATF several years ago and that these agents have testified Alabama gang, Tennessee, Secret Service, Fort Lauderdale, Washington, D.C., and Michigan [agencies]" had attended the 1992 event.

The ADL subscribes to the NAAWP News. According to Michael Winograd, assistant area director of the South Florida office of the ADL in Miami, his agency sent a letter to the Fort Lauderdale Police Department Chief in 1992 concerning the involvement of FLPD officers in the roundup. And, according to Captain Robert Lamberti with the Internal Affairs division at FLPD, the agency did receive the ADL letter and the assistant to the chief, Capt. Lou Hartman, investigated the complaint and assisted FLPD Chief Joseph Gerwens in responding in writing to the ADL.

Hartman indicated in a telephone interview that his office determined that many of the officers who attended the event were retired from the agency. However, "Over the past 15 years, there were officers who attended this round-up and became disenfranchised with some of the literature and posters that were displayed at the entrance and did not return," he said.

Hartman also revealed that he has attended one roundup with several FLPD officers and said that he and the others were offended by the tone of the event.

"According to the invitation we received [from Rightmyer], this was billed as a law enforcement gathering for recreational purposes. There were a number of activities such as golf, white-water rafting and volleyball there, and it was a good opportunity to network with other agencies. But the small group of individuals who were engaging in some distasteful conduct, probably under the influence of alcohol, really offended many of our officers. During our investigation, we did talk to a number of personnel who had attended once or twice and came away with the same impression. I advised the chief that I attended one of these events and what was observed," he said.

Hartman also stated that FLPD employees were informed of the overtly racist overtones of the roundup and "we did advise our officers that we would prefer them not to attend in the future," he said.

It was also unclear from the investigation conducted by FLPD at the time whether the off-duty officers who had visited the area went to specifically attend the roundup or had gone to Ocoee, Tenn., to whitewater raft and kayak on the Nantahala River. The area is the location of the 1996 Summer Olympic competition in the kayak event and a number of Fort Lauderdale officers have been involved with the sport over the years.

None of the officers or agents interviewed for this article recalled any active duty FLPD employees attending the roundup making any racial slurs, and none of the retired officers were identified as having engaged in allegedly racist activity while there.

"Chief Joe Gerwens responded to the ADL letter and advised them that the Fort Lauderdale Police Department does not condone this type of activity and asked if they had any other information involving anything that could be construed as racist, prejudicial or bias-oriented activity involving our agency, we would appreciate being informed at once," Hartman said.

Arthur Teitelbaun, the South Florida director of the ADL, acknowledged in a telephone interview that of all the agencies in the region that his group has heard complaints about concerning alleged racist activity, "Fort Lauderdale in particular does not comes to mind." Teitelbaun also said he recalled no serious reports of racial bias involving officers with FLPD in the time he has supervised the ADL office in South Florida.

Civil Rights or Intelligence Collection?

The ADL sent a polite letter to the chief of police of Fort Lauderdale alleging attendance at a racist gathering. But the issue of a civil rights organization having specific knowledge of the roundup, including information concerning the agencies allegedly involved, is perplexing, based on the public pronouncements of groups like the ADL when the political right or groups like the militia are the subject of interest.

The ADL's "Armed and Dangerous: Militias Take Aim At The Federal Government" report, for example, makes several unsupported suppositions about the emerging Second Amendment community, including allegations of extremist group behavior and anti-minority bias. But the ADL makes no mention of a racist law enforcement activity it openly admits knowing about for more than three years.

The ADL is a non-profit group, collecting tax-exempt funds. The FBI and the news media use this organization as a source for information on the so-called radical right, yet its conduct in this matter tends to support long-asserted claims by many groups that the ADL has another agenda entirely.

The ADL has never publicly "exposed" the ATF-supported roundup because, according to several intelligence and law enforcement sources and voluminous published reports, it uses the criminal intelligence units of most metropolitan law enforcement agencies to collect and disseminate information about racist activity involving specifically targeted conservative or Christian causes in America that are deemed unfriendly to the State of Israel.

"The ADL has managed to penetrate the intelligence units of virtually every major law enforcement agency in the United States," according to an investigation by the U.S. Attorney's office in San Francisco several years ago.

According to Michigan attorney Abdeen Jabara, in an article in the magazine Covert Action, the ADL "has run a private nationwide spy network...[in] collaboration with state, federal and foreign intelligence gathering entities. This sharing of confidential information and resources is not only illegal, but a violation of trust."

The article, published in the summer of 1993, also documents and exposes the extent of ADL involvement in the law enforcement criminal-intelligence profession with "thousands of police officers around the country" being used as informants.

The credibility of the ADL and the SPLC as civil rights organizations involved in the exposure of racism has been called into question in the aftermath of the ATF roundup story, since both groups subscribe to the David Duke newspaper, and it appears that neither group ever publicly identified or denounced the activity as patently and openly hostile to minorities.

As Jeff Randall said in a recent interview, "If the ADL or Morris Dees [of the SPLC] had photos of us [the militia] handing out Federal Nigger Hunting Licenses, making cruel t-shirts featuring or ridiculing minorities or dressing in Klan robes, we would be featured on the front page of their so-called intelligence reports within weeks."

According to Randall, these civil rights groups behave more like lucrative political action committees promoting leftist causes. They clearly are not in the business of exposing hatred or promoting understanding as much as they are involved in raising money, he said.

He further stated that the ADL and the SPLC are definitely in a lucrative business position with FBI endorsement and a tax exempt status. Randall produced a recent article in a Montgomery newspaper that indicated that the SPLC, for example, has more than $60 million in its reserve funds, "yet they still aggressively solicit donations to collect information on militia groups like ours, which is over 10 percent black."

The leftist agenda of these so-called civil rights groups appears to frequently fail the test when it comes to supporting minority groups they claim to represent, if the group or individual is not liberal enough for their taste. The ADL has, for example, attacked a number of American Jewish leaders for not supporting their view on certain issues. Conservative Jews, such as Professor Norm Resnick of the USA Patriot Network, and organizations like Jews for The Preservation of Firearms Ownership also tend to take exception to the ADL's attitude about constitutional protections, privacy and freedom of expression.

The fact that the ADL has acquired a reputation of selectively exposing allegations of bigotry, while ignoring those agencies it exploits for intelligence purposes, is consistent with the charges made by many in the media and in law enforcement concerning the League's actual agenda. That agenda appears to be focused as much on espionage as on equal rights.

Espionage From the Right

Spying is not exactly something that Randall will completely disavow, however. The Minutemen's exposure of an openly racist gathering of drunken federal agents has sent shock waves throughout the nation. Eight days after the release of their videotape and report, the top cops in the country, including the directors of both the FBI and ATF, were being called on the carpet of the floor of Congress.

The leaders of the Gadsden Minutemen were contacted and interviewed by Media Bypass within hours of the release of the ATF Good O Boys Roundup report. Who these people are and what they managed to expose about the federal government may very well make history. Indeed, the already fragile public image of the BATF may never recover.

"I'm with the government and I'm here to subpoena you."

Despite cooperating with the authorities and agreeing to an interview, Jeff Randall was presented with a subpoena by Department of Justice Inspector/General investigator, M. Paul Benneis when they met on 27 July in Chattanooga, Tennessee Catching the ATF on film "in their natural element," as Randall puts it, has resulted in the improbable outcome of having many in the radical left and the far right in America joining in a call for the agency's demise. As a direct result of "Operation Achilles Heel," some in Congress are now demanding that the ATF be immediately dismantled.

"Rules of Engagement"

The headquarters for the Minutemen is located on 200 heavily-wooded acres behind a chain link fence patrolled by large "Schutzhund" German Shepherds imported from Bavaria. The perimeter is monitored with security cameras. The local FBI has been advised to stop at the gate and call the group's commander on a cellular telephone before attempting entry or, agents have been warned, they will be met with gunfire.

G. Robert Langford, the special agent in charge (SAC) of the Birmingham FBI office, has agreed that, with or without a search or arrest warrant, he and his fellow agents will indeed call the commander of the Minutemen for an appointment before they cross the line onto their property.

In April, the FBI contacted Randall and learned of these "rules of engagement" when it attempted to interview the militia's leadership concerning the Oklahoma City bombing. When contacted by Langford, Randall advised him that the FBI was invited to make an appointment to come out to the property, but, if for whatever reason, they came across the fence along the perimeter of his property without permission, "We will be going to war," he said.

Although the FBI declined to visit Randall that afternoon, the following day agents called and arranged to meet with the militia on what the SAC called "neutral ground" at a Gadsden hotel. On 28 April 1995, Randall, Kemp and several members of his unit went to the meeting wearing sidearms.

"If the FBI feels they need their agents to be armed 24 hours a day, then they need to understand that we do as well. They did not object to meeting us under those terms," Randall said.

According to an audiotape of the meeting between the Minutemen and the FBI, when asked by Special Agent Peter B. Symonds, of the Gadsden field office, if Randall was threatening them when he said he would shoot any federal agent found on his property without permission, Randall advised that his statement was not a threat, but a "warning."

Amazingly, Langford can be heard on the audiotape telling Randall that the FBI agrees that agents will only visit him after making a telephone appointment, regardless of the circumstances.

"Damage Control"

Despite repeated ATF denials and attempts at damage control, the intervention of congressional oversight into the ATF activities was almost immediate. At a Senate Judiciary Committee hearing on 21 July 1995, Ronald K. Noble, the Department of Treasury Administrator of the ATF, wiped sweat from his forehead with a handkerchief as he fielded questions from the committee concerning the 15-year-old roundup. ATF Director John McGaw and Noble, Jamie S. Gorelick with the Department of Justice, FBI Director Louis Freeh, DEA Administrator John Constantine and others were called to testify before the panel.

Freeh confirmed on July 18 that seven FBI agents have attended 2 past roundups. Expressing concern about his agency's ability to investigate such incidents, Noble acknowledged that the ATF is unsure how many of these types of racist events actually occur.

"The fact that this Good O Boy Roundup could exist for 15 years and we are just finding out about it, I don't know how many other Good O Boy Roundups are going on in this country right now that we don't know anything about," Noble said.

The overtly racist activity at the event was also confirmed when McGaw admitted an incident during a "Redneck of the Year" skit in 1989 that the Minutemen and George had reported, but had been subsequently denied by ATF press relations personnel.

"A person was dressed in a Ku Klux Klan robe and another [white] person [had] a blackened face. The Ku Klux Klansman was committing sodomy on that particular individual," he said.

McGaw failed to admit, or perhaps did not know that both of the individuals in this skit are believed to be current active-duty ATF agents, according to the sources who witnessed the skit and have given statements to Department of Justice investigators.

An active duty white ATF agent acknowledged that he was confronted when attempting to bring Cordell Malone, a black friend and fellow ATF special agent, to one of the roundups.

"You were born trash, you will live trash and you will die trash"

Perhaps the most disturbing testimony about the roundup in general, and Rightmyer in particular, came from Special Agent Larry Stewart. The agent related his fear of attending the roundup because it "was held in the hills of East Tennessee, it was held at night, in an atmosphere that most African Americans

Mr. Jeff Randall
Gadsden Minutemen
Post Office Box 2
Attalla, Alabama 35954

Dear Mr. Randall:

I am sorry I will not accept your invitation to attend a meeting of the Gadsden Minutemen scheduled for January 14, 1994.

Questions and inquiries regarding the Branch Davidian Case in Elk, Texas, and the Randy Weaver Case in Bonner's Ferry, Idaho, should be made to the Departments of Treasury and Justice respectively.

Both Cabinet departments have conducted official investigations and issued formal reports on those matters.

Sincerely yours,

James M. Cavanaugh
Special Agent in Charge

The Minutemen have invited the ATF, FBI and even Morris Dees to attend their public meetings.

Both are assigned to the Chattanooga, Tenn., ATF office. Special Agent John Scott admitted to the Senate panel that he did in fact attend the rally this year and, when he attempted to bring Malone along, he was involved in a "confrontation" with several attendees.

Scott told the Senate that he heard several officers and some unidentified federal agents state that "...the ATF manages to f— up everything they are involved with and now you have messed up the roundup by bringing niggers to the roundup."

associated with extremist group activity or Klan activity."

Stewart also recounted his experience and unpleasant direct contacts with Rightmyer:

"It wasn't until later on that I heard additional information about the individuals who had been identified as going to the Good O Boys Roundup. In fact, it was in 1985 at the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center [FLETC] in Glynco, Ga. During that period of time...[I was] assigned in the capacity of senior instructor of course development.

Federal agents are attempting to identify the ATF agents in all of the photos taken by Randall. This photo, taken by "George" shows two ATF agents sharing moonshine.

During the course of this assignment, between January 1985 and July of 1985, former Resident Agent In Charge of the Knoxville, Tenn., post of duty of ATF, Gene Rightmyer, was assigned to the ATF National Academy to coordinate a temporary nine-week ATF Basic Agent class. This class, once again, was sponsored and coordinated by the ATF, and it did not allow for any specific or direct involvement on my behalf, since I was there as a part of the FLETC staff.

"However, several African-American agents were enrolled in this class, whom I had earlier taught in the Treasury's Criminal Investigative School. These agents included African American Special Agents Dundee O. Albritton and William "Bill" Stringer. At the beginning of their new agent training class, these agents notified me that coordinators for their class were planning a get-together at the student center of the facility."

Stewart testified that the two black agents invited him to attend the FLETC event. According to Stewart's statement, the three black agents were standing in a corner at the official event talking when Rightmyer approached them and said, "You were born trash, you will live trash and you will die trash."

Stewart further testified that Albritton told him after Rightmyer walked away that Rightmyer had made a similar statement to him earlier at the academy.

Stewart reported that after leaving FLETC, he was assigned to the Atlanta ATF office, where he said most of the agents and supervisors there had routinely attended the roundup each year since its inception. He also revealed that the roundup was began in Georgia in the late 1970s.

A 10 Year History of Racism

Despite denials from the ATF that it was ever aware of the roundup, former

Supervisory Special Agent Curtis Cooper, one of the first black ATF agents assigned to help run the Nashville office, testified that he was warned by ATF headquarters in Washington that Rightmyer was racist and had resisted Cooper's assignment to Tennessee.

"It will be a cold day in hell before I work for a nigger," Cooper quoted Rightmyer saying.

After hearing statements about overtly racist actions from other black ATF agents, and allegations that former ATF Director Steve Higgins had also attended the roundup (a charge he has denied), outrage from the Senate was bipartisan and unwavering. As the hearings opened, the attitude of the committee's leadership was already hostile to the ATF.

"We on the Judiciary Committee ...are deeply troubled by news reports that for years, some law enforcement agents, including those with the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms and some other federal, state and local law enforcement agencies, organized and participated in an annual formal social gathering that is racially restricted and punctuated by racist trappings. Those who participate in such an event, knowing of its racist nature, should not carry a badge. Plain and simple," chairman and Utah Republican Sen. Orrin Hatch said.

Hatch indicated he had received affidavits alleging sexual harassment, gang rape and drug use at one of the roundup events, and that the information would be forwarded to the Justice Department.

Delaware Democrat Sen. Joseph Biden was even more assertive about the consequences of racist misconduct on the part of federal law enforcement.

"I think we should make it clear, anybody who attended these things, and if they turn out to be as bad as they appeared, that at a minimum, they should be shunned," Biden said. "They should be disgraced out of their badge. This besmirches the reputation of everybody who wears a badge. And I think you owe it to them to make sure you understand that by whatever means you can, legal and societal, you make these folks pay."

Public Trust is Gone

Despite assurances from McGaw that the ATF would investigate and identify all current and former employees involved with the rally, several senators expressed distrust in the agency's ability to investigate itself.

Iowa Republican Sen. Charles Grassley asked, "Why should the public, or even those of us in the Congress believe that the administration will get to the bottom of the latest controversy?"

On a federal level, the investigation into the various agencies could take months. Since the exposure of the roundup, officials in Tennessee have confirmed that a number of Tennessee Bureau of Investigation (TBI) agents, Judicial District Investigators and other East Tennessee law enforcement officers participated in the event. Florence, Ky., Birmingham, Ala., Washington, D.C., Metro Police, Canadian and Florida agencies are conducting their own inquiries, according to the Associated Press.

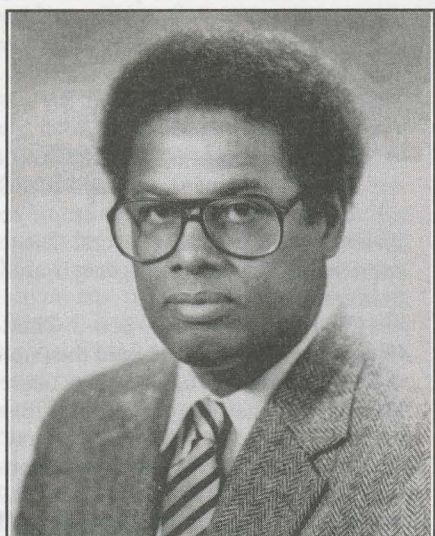

Meanwhile, back in rural Missouri, Tennessee and Alabama, at kitchen table strategy meetings, on the clandestine radio channels and along the Internet, the militia movement is still conducting operations against the ATF and FBI.

Encrypted postings on the various militia bulletin boards from the Gadsden Minutemen seem to indicate another operation is underway, according to a computer analyst tracking this activity. What the "patriot games" about to be played in the coming months may reveal is anyone's guess, and Jeff Randall is not talking. Yet.

Stumbling Into Hell

Why are we even considering sending troops into the Balkans?

Why are we even considering sending American troops into the Balkans? To defend the military security or even the economic security of the United States? Or because of the kind of vague notions, political hype and short-sighted expediency that have so often caused nations to stumble into monumental tragedies?

Worst of all, are we preparing to send young men out to die so that the old men who have mismanaged the United Nations and NATO policies in the Balkans will not look like the jackasses they are?

In foreign policy as in domestic policy, there are always people who think that they are so much smarter than everyone else that they ought to be making other people's decisions for them. A classic example of this arrogance was the decision to put an embargo on arms to the Bosnian government, making it impossible for them to defend themselves effectively against Serbian attack, because the international anointed had a better scenario in mind for bringing the whole war to an end quickly.

In order to impose this grand scheme, U.N. "peacekeepers" were sent in to keep a peace that didn't exist and to create "safe havens" that weren't safe, as well as announcing innumerable "cease fires" in which no one stopped shooting. Far from bringing the combatants together to make peace, the U.N. and NATO forces had trouble coordinating with one another.

Meanwhile, back in the editorial offices of the print and broadcast media, the journalistic anointed pontificated that we should "do something" about the slaughters and atrocities going on in the Balkans. If ever there was a formula for disaster, it is the notion that we should "do something," without any clear-cut plan of what specifically we should do, how much it is going to cost in blood and treasure or how we are going to handle the ugly surprises that always go with war.

Since there is a war going on somewhere in the world most of the time, are we to send American troops constantly scurrying around the globe to get shot at in every corner of the earth? Or are we only to get involved in those wars which are televised for showing at dinner time in American homes?

Arrogantly stupid as the arms embargo against the Bosnian government was when it was imposed, we cannot now simply go back to square one and lift the embargo without some very clear plan as to what we do with the messy situation that has been created in the meantime.

If the U.N. and NATO troops pull out when the arms embargo is lifted, and American troops are there to help them get out, does anyone imagine that the Serbs are going to stand idly by and wait for all the arms to arrive in Bosnia and for the Bosnian troops to be equipped and trained to use the new weapons?

The Serbs are obviously going to attack while they still have the advantage. If the U.N. and NATO troops are out and the American troops in, then Americans are going to get caught in the cross fire at best or be specifically targeted at worst.

It is not going to matter two cents worth whether these Americans are called "peace keepers" or by some other name that President Clinton and Secretary of State Christopher dream up. They are going to get shot at, they are going to bleed and they are going to die.

Even if they are not "ground troops," pilots who get shot down end up on the ground anyway. Even if the military sent in are merely "instructors" who are there to show the Bosnian defenders how to use the weapons that are sent, when they get killed, they will be just as dead as if they were called something else.

One of the worst things about wars is that the needless deaths of some become excuses for the needless deaths of more. Let a few hundred or a few thousand Americans get killed in the Balkans and it may become politically impossible for our "leaders" to simply pull out and admit what fools they were to have sent them in.

There may be talk about how we don't want to let the enemy get away with what they have done. Or we may be challenged to "take a stand" to maintain our credibility. Or there may be all sorts of other reasons concocted to protect the reputations of "statesmen" at the expenses of the lives of young Americans.

During the Vietnam war, the time came when many were urging that we simply declare victory and leave. In the Balkans, it is time that NATO and the U.N. declare defeat and leave — and never get into anything like this again.

Loss of credibility? Yes. It has already been lost, at least for this kind of operation.

Once we demonstrate that we have outgrown the illusion of halfway involvement in wars on the cheap, we may gain more respect and credibility. Other countries will know that when we get ready to fight, we are truly ready to fight and to do whatever it takes to win. Unless we are ready to make that kind of commitment, we should stay out.

TO STUDY FOSTER'S DEATH IS TO LEARN FEDERAL SECRETS

For those interested in further investigations of the death of Vincent Foster, deputy counsel at the White House, I would like to say that those persons who are bent on keeping down further investigations are doing the country a great disservice. There are ample indications of a huge cover-up here, and persons who have dared to write about it are being declared paranoid.

Insinuations have been made in articles in some metropolitan newspapers that persons who pursue the Foster death are inventing theories and spreading rumors about conspiracies. I think this is disinformation at its worst. Journalism that pursues that tactic is the worst kind of journalism.

Investigations so far indicate that the Foster death ought to be pursued to the greatest extent. Do not let us let this be abandoned, as Jack Kennedy's murder was.

At this time I do not feel as if I have enough documented material to say what happened or why or where he died, but I strongly believe it is peculiar that immediately after Foster died, his associates began talking suicide before they had even checked out his office or done routine examinations for evidence.

I am not an expert on Foster. I am going to seek more documentation before I write further on Foster. I am one of the Washington reporters — four that I know of to date — who have been fired or threatened with firing, or worse, in the last few days for writing about Foster. I am seeking in writing the cause of my latest separation from a prosperous account. Probably I will not get the cause. I believe there were business connections.

I think that Foster's death is the key to many of the thrusts for power in our government, to a number of the actions adverse to the public good, to schemes for making big money and to manipulations in politics to win public office — to say nothing of international intrigue.

I believe his death is the key to what has happened in four different administrations in the White House. I think Foster was dispatched on numerous missions overseas to take money of others to Swiss banks. I understand he dealt in top-secret operations constantly, that he was privy to an international spying operation which he did not set up, but which was working in the government and used to make money for others. Foster had some experience with the BCCI attempt to take over U.S. banking institutions.

I also think he may have known why atomic secrets were going out of the country to Israel. Apparently, there were several different spying operations going on in government with which he was acquainted. I think Foster knew why certain persons in government wanted to bestow aid to Israel in repayment for Israel's help in getting weapons to Iran in 1980, to pay Iran's government for keeping American hostages 71 more days.

These are just a few of the reasons why I think that every inch of Foster's career in recent years should be investigated.

I do know that he was scheduled to talk to the president, a close friend, on Wednesday to tell him some of the abhorrent things he had learned which were current in government. Foster wanted to talk eyeball to eyeball with Clinton, but without Webster Hubble present.

But Foster never got the chance. The arrangements were made Monday night. Foster died Tuesday afternoon.

The CAMPO BRIEF

The examination of the Emergency War Powers Act of 1963

Editor's note: The following is a verbatim transcript of a lawsuit filed in July to the South Dakota Supreme Court.

IN THE STATE SUPREME COURT, HUGHES COUNTY, PIERRE, SOUTH DAKOTA, REPUBLIC/STATE

Writ of Certiorari

Michael William Martin, petitioner/ claimant v Circuit Court First Judicial District Bon Homme County South Dakota, Republic /State Defendant

STATEMENT OF CASE:

During World War I (WWI), the U.S. Congress passed the Trading With the Enemy Act (12 USC Sec. 95a, October 6, 1917). This Act was later amended into the Banking Relief Act of March 9, 1933 (Title 12 USC 95 (b); c 1, Title 1, Sec. 48 Stat. 1). By means of that amendment, the United States has been operating under WAR AND EMERGENCY POWERS since March 9, 1933.

Under the 1933 Banking Relief Act, the federal government declared the Bank Holiday of March 6, 1933, and relieved the banks from their contractual obligation to the American people of redeeming their Federal Reserve Notes in gold (the Federal Reserve Note originally constituted a warehouse receipt for real gold which the people had placed on deposit with the banks).

The original Trading With the Enemy Act of October 6, 1917, was enacted at a time when the United States was at war with Germany (WWI), and is therefore Constitutional under Article 1, Sec. 8 Cl. 11, U.S. Constitution:

"Congress shall have the power to declare War, grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal, and make Rules concerning Captures of Land Water."

The amended version (1933) of the original Trading With the Enemy Act (1917) was approved and passed by Congress on March 9, 1933. This amended version was enacted at a time when the United States was not at War with any foreign foe.

Further, the amended version (1933) was radically different from the 1917 version. In 1917, the jurisdiction of the Trading With the Enemy Act excluded all citizens of the United States. However, the 1933 version included citizens of the United States under its jurisdiction by adding the following language:

"By any person within the United States of any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof."

Under the amended version (1933) of the 1917 Act and by operation of law, the American people became the same (status) as the foreign "Enemy" of 1917. As such, all Americans were therefore subject to regulations, rules, licenses, orders and proclamations issued by the President of the United States or the Secretary of the Treasury since March 9, 1933 (12 USC 95b).

After the American people were declared to be "enemies," all legal and commercial intercourse became illegal, and the only way one could do business or any type of legal intercourse was to obtain permission from our government by means of a form of license (by law, a "license" is a permit to do that which would otherwise be illegal).

As you might expect, our government normally protects the United States by restricting the activities of "enemies." For example, we wouldn't expect the federal government to allow communist agents to travel freely or open a business in our country. Nevertheless, there are times when the government might allow members of an "enemy" nation to travel from New York to Chicago. For example, when athletes of the former Soviet Union came to America, our government granted them special permission ("licenses") to do that (travel) which would otherwise be prohibited for Russian agents.

That our government might "license" foreigners who might be enemies is unremarkable, but whoever imagined that our own government licensed us for the very same reason? Today, if one wants to travel, one has to have a Driver's l i c e n s e ; if one wants to work, one must o b t a i n a license (Social Security Card). It has sometimes been said, one will not be able to buy, sell, or trade without the M a r k (Marque—License of Reprisal, Black's Law Dictionary, 5th ed.).

By Executive Order 2039 of March 6, 1933, and Executive Order 2040 of March 9, 1933, the belligerent (now) United States (federal government) acting under the War Power seized title to all gold (lawful, constitutional money), took physical possession of all the money, and left the American people penniless, bankrupt, and without means to lawfully pay their debts.

After the United States had seized title and took physical possession of the people's (lawful) money, the government found it necessary to issue a new form of currency in order for the people to carry on normal business transactions. This new currency was in the form of Federal Reserve Bank N o t e s (War and Emergency currency), and not Federal Reserve Notes (warehouse receipts for gold).

"This new money will be worth 100 cents on the dollar because it is backed by the credit of the Nation. It will represent a mortgage on all the homes and other property of all the people in the Nation" (Congressional Record March 19, 1933).

The people were now prohibited from being able to pay their debts at law (i.e. with lawful money/gold) and were forced to mortgage their goods and services to one of the banks or lending institutions in o r d e r to obtain Federal Reserve Bank Notes in order to discharge (not lawfully "pay") their debts. The people now being classified as the "enemy" also became the captured chattel property of the United States to secure the debt (Federal Reserve Bank Notes).

The governors of the states of the Union capitulated to the demands of President Roosevelt on March 6, 1933 (Roosevelt papers 1933). The former states of the Union became nothing more than political subdivisions or occupied territories of the belligerent corporate United States (Butler v. U.S. Supreme Court, 1936, Public Law 93-549).

The former judicial Courts (Court of Justice) now took silent judicial notice of the Maritime (International) In Rem jurisdiction, and took the role as Executive Officers (not Judicial) to enforce the Federal and State statutes in all cases whatsoever. The judges and lawyers in essence became nothing more than executive political hatchet men of their branch of government to enforce public policy statutes enacted by Congress and to enforce performance on this new commercial paper (Federal Reserve Bank Notes) in order to give it some sort of value.

Once the people were declared to be the "Enemy," they lost all their u n a l i e n a b l e rights under the (unlawfully suspended) Constitution and Bill of Rights. Since 1933, the American people have had no unalienable rights to life, liberty, and property... unless (until) these presumptions are opposed, denied, and rebutted (Remedy—due process—5th and 14th Amendments, Constitution of the United States of America).

It is a matter of law that the Question of Jurisdiction can be raised at any time: Therefore, the only Question before our courts, and in this specific case, Circuit Court, Bon Homme County, First Judicial District, South Dakota Republic/State, is one of Jurisdiction in the matter of the estate of Louise C. Martin (Docket # 92-073), and particularly relating to a hearing held in said Court on June 29, 1993.

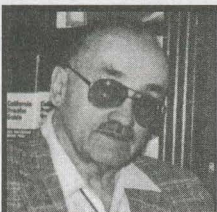

Further, Petitioner/Claimant asserts his Right to a hearing before this Court within its proper and constitutional jurisdiction, Sua Sponte, and demands this Supreme Court order said Circuit Court (Bon Homme County) to schedule a hearing relating to aforementioned docket # 92-073. This hearing to be held before this Court will have no gold-fringe (presumed Maritime/Admiralty jurisdiction) around the American flag...it will be a common law Court where all involved will have access to all unalienable Rights... realizing these are far beyond civil rights in significance. Petitioner/Claimant further submits that he had not "appeared" within any Court of Law regarding this matter of constitutional common law of inheritance.

Plaintiff/Claimant further submits that he is not an attorney and for the Court to read this Petition for its substance over the form.

HOW TO OPEN A BANK ACCOUNT WITH NO SOCIAL SECURITY NUMBER!

(Special) Do you want financial privacy? Good, because now you can get it. Yes, it's possible to open up a bank account without giving the bank your Social Security number!!

And, if they refuse to cooperate - then you have legal grounds to sue them!

This method of financial is as simple as they come. No need to hide your money offshore - or set up a complicated trust. Or worse, put your accounts in someone else's name. Finding out how to open a bank account with no Social Security Number is easy. Just write

"No Social Security Number" on any piece of paper, along with your name and mailing address. Enclose a check or money order for $12.95, and send it off today to: Anderson Publishing, 717 12th Street, #27, Golden, CO 80401.

How to Solve all YOUR Mailorder/MLM Problems

7 years of research and development - while examining thousands of money-making programs and actually testing over a hundred - yield surprising results:

1 Of all the people who try to make money with mailorder or MLM, 98-99% never make money. About 80% of the individuals who try to make money with mailorder/MLM give up within 90 days.

2 Most names bought or rented from cheap mailing lists consist mostly of those people who have given up. If you mail to them, your response is often 0% - 0.1% (1 in 1,000 if you are lucky!)

3 Many "Print-and-Mail" operations are ripoffs. (This is where you send your flyer to a company that combines your flyer with a dozen others and mails them to "several thousand hot prospects.") We've tested several of these outfits over the years and have often received not even one response!

4 Most mailorder/MLM programs fail within a year - about 90% quickly bite the dust!

5 Most mailorder/MLM programs are designed so the company and its owners can make huge amounts of money, while only a few so-called "Heavy Hitters" (people with a substantial existing down-line or customer base) make good money. Practically everyone else loses money.

6 In general, for any programs that pay commissions on more than four levels, the more levels there are, the more difficult it is to make money. The most profitable programs tend to be those with a high payout at the first level.

7 Many people are hamstrung by their own negativity and the negativity of their family, friends and associates. Most of this negativity comes from all the times our parents said: "NO!" .. "DON'T DO THAT; YOU'LL HURT YOURSELF!" .. "STOP THAT!" ... etc. Because of negativity, even with good programs, many people fail because they don't follow through. They don't persist and persevere.

The solutions to all these problems are incorporated in

How You Can Buy Almost Any Drug You Want - Legally - Without a Prescription!

The "Secret"...Greedy Doctors and Drug Companies Hope is Never Revealed!

(Special) Did you know you can buy almost any drug you want-legally-without a prescription? And better still, you can save up to 70% off its regular price. These aren't low quality generic drugs-they are name brand drugs from the big companies. How can you do this? By taking advantage of a little known, almost secret federal law that allows you to import American drugs into the U.S. without a prescription-at dirt cheap prices! Here's how this little known law, called the Orphan Drug Act, came about. Several years ago, AIDS activists pressured Congress into allowing AIDS patients to import special drugs into the U.S. By allowing the terminally ill to do this, Congress left a loophole in the law allowing almost anyone to import prescription drugs.

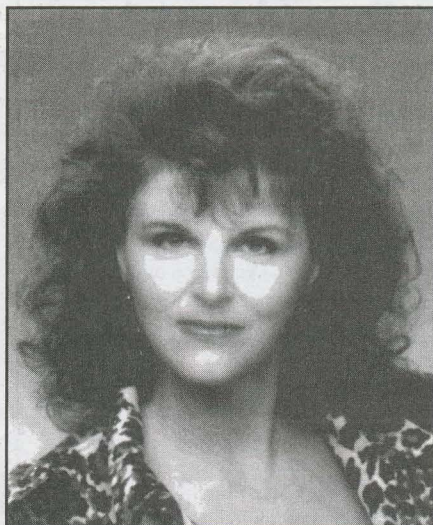

Why don't you know about this law? The big drug companies and doctors don't want you to know about it! If the 83 million Americans who take prescription drugs knew about this law, the greedy doctors and drug companies would lose billions. Another huge (and potentially life saving) advantage of this law is you can import unapproved drugs. American Drug companies don't even make. This is vitally important to anyone who has a rare disease that can be cured by a drug - but is too costly for money-grubbing American drug companies to make. It's your right to use the Orphan Drug Act and save big money, and possibly your life. Here's just a small sample of the drugs you can save up to 70% on: Tagamet, Inderal, Lasix, AZT, Zovirax, Ampicillin, Flagl, Zantac, and many more. How can you find out how to use this law? It's simple. With your permission, I'd like to send you a 340 page book called, How to Buy Almost Any Drug Legally, Without a Prescription. Put into action the information revealed in this amazing book and if you don't save 5 times its cost on your very first order - you'll get a no questions asked refund.

(Dozens of overseas pharmacies are listed. Phone numbers and addresses included.)

Please hurry! Supplies of this incredible book are extremely limited!

It's easy to order. Just write your name and address on any piece of paper and mail it along with a check or money order for $12.95 + $3.00 postage and handling to: Anderson Publishing, 717 - 12th St., #550, Golden, CO 80401. Remember, if you don't save 5 times the cost of the book on your very first order, you'll get a complete refund.

Dual Citizenship for Mexicans

A Mandate For Political Influence

A proposal, now under review before the Mexican Congress, would allow Mexican nationals who become citizens of another country the right to retain their Mexican citizenship.

Commenting on the plan, Alejandro Carrillo, the international affairs director for the ruling Revolutionary Institutional Party (PRI) in Mexico, states, "This is a way to give Mexicans living abroad the same voting, health, and other rights enjoyed by other citizens in that country."

If the plan is adopted, Mexican nationals would not only keep their property and voting rights in Mexico, their U.S. citizenship would afford them the privilege to vote in U.S. elections and qualify for taxpayer-financed welfare, food stamps and free health care.

Jorge Bustamante, president of the College of the Northern Border in Tijuana, Mexico and a professor of sociology at the University of Notre Dame in South Bend, Ind., claims the proposed legislation would enable Mexicans to participate in the "politics of both countries."

"Anyone who wants to defend the interests of Mexico in whichever country they reside, augments their political power in order to make it within that country's rules," he said. "One way to achieve that objective is to make it easier for them to vote in the elections through acquiring U. S. citizenship."

Bustamante admits that a motivating factor behind dual-citizenship legislation is the desire, on the part of the Mexican government, to influence U.S. politics.

"This is a drastic change for the [Mexican] government, but it's the result of Mexico bashing," Bustamante said. "There is deep frustration over [California Governor] Pete Wilson, Sen. [Alfonse] D'Amato, and how Mexico is increasingly talked about and treated in the U.S."

Bustamante adds that more than 2 million Mexicans could take advantage of this dual status, and due to their geographic concentration could have a dramatic impact on U.S. politics.

"About two-thirds are in California, 20 percent are in Texas, and Mexican-Americans tend to vote Democratic," he said. "This is an empowerment issue whose time has come."

The impact of a unified vote was made apparent in the 1994 California senate race won by Diane Feinstein. According to a Los Angeles Times exit poll, Latinos voted 67 percent to 22 percent for Democrat Feinstein over Republican Michael Huffington, who supported Proposition 187. Latinos were the only group to increase their support of Feinstein since the special election of 1992 to replace now-Gov. Wilson.

PROPOSITION 187
A MOTIVATING FACTOR
Proposition 187, the California ballot initiative known as Save our State (SOS), was passed into law by California voters last November. It excludes illegal immigrants from such social programs as welfare and free health care, and requires state agencies to report illegals seeking benefits to the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Furthermore, the law prevents undocumented students from attending public schools, whose officials likewise must report suspected illegal aliens to the INS.

Latino activists claim that Proposition 187 has been a catalyst for spawning greater Latino political participation, including promotion of citizenship.

Miguel Escobar, press attache to the Consulate General of Mexico in Los Angeles, has stated that the issue of double citizenship has been raised for years and has no relation to the passage of 187. However, the idea of dual citizenship was not aggressively pursued until the Mexican counsel in Los Angeles, Jose Angle Pescador Osuna, began pressing for its implementation following passage of the ballot measure.

Meanwhile, the INS has authorized Hermandad Mexicana Nacional (the national Mexican brotherhood), an organization promoting immigrants' rights in Southern California, to administer the U.S. citizenship examination. The group is now offering lectures and free tutoring for the exam to individuals within the community. In Los Angeles, immigration authorities report receiving 1,000 applications a month — double the usual amount.

And Robert Lovato, executive director of the Central American Resource Center in Los Angeles, said, "I think 187 has demonstrated to Mexicans and other Latinos that we've got to vote, because they're willing to go this far with our community and try to get away with it."

THE ROLE OF ILLEGALS

Latinos residing in the United States have attained influential positions across the political spectrum partly through building coalitions, court rulings that have produced affirmative action, and through the federal Voting Rights Act, which requires that Latino-majority districts be drawn based on a composite of all residents, not just citizens.

Traditionally independent, Mexican immigrants have been reluctant to forfeit their citizenship. However, through the passage of NAFTA, the interdependent relationship between the United States and Mexico has lowered resistance to dual citizenship, as Mexican companies can now bid on government work in the United States, and thereby put themselves on equal footing within the American marketplace.

Accordingly, an estimated one in five Mexicans has close relatives in the United States, which has helped solidify a vested interest on the part of the Mexican populace in the social, economic and political policies of America.

If influencing American politics is indeed the desired plan of the Mexican government, then the focus of concern must be on the role played by illegal immigrants within the United States.

Peter Brimelow, senior editor of Forbes and National Review, and author of "Alien Nation" states, "Illegal immigration is out of control...There is absolute consensus among economists that immigration does nothing for us at all... Immigration right now is a gigantic act of social engineering, resulting in a demographic transformation unprecedented in the history of the world. It is the greatest story in journalism — a country transforming itself, by accident, against its will, with no economic good whatever, and nobody dares talk about it. Americans have had an experience with immigration and the welfare state, but never the two of them together. In the past, 40 percent of immigrants failed to succeed in the U.S. and went home. Today they go on welfare."

Health clinics and hospitals spanning the 200-mile U. S.-Mexican border are being besieged by a tidal wave of illegal aliens who cross the border with the intent purpose of giving birth in the United States.

Naturalization Service

.....

Emily Jauregui, 29, a pregnant Mexican-American reporter for the El Paso Times, decided to investigate the safeguards that supposedly keep illegal aliens from entering the country and receiving social benefits.

Two weeks before her baby was due, Jauregui crossed the border from Ciudad Juarez, Mexico into El Paso. In full view of the U. S. Border Patrol, Jauregui watched as pregnant women floated across the Rio Grande River in intertubes to the safety of the American shore.

At Texas Technical Health Center in El Paso, Jauregui registered for prenatal health care then went to Thomason Hospital to preregister her baby's delivery.

Jauregui was never asked if she was a U. S. citizen, nor was she asked for identification. The only requirement was a notarized letter from a friend or relative claiming she lived at that individual's residence.

"What if the hospital finds out I don't live there?" Jauregui asked two other pregnant women, who were both Mexican citizens.

The woman both responded that no one ever checks. They added that Medicaid would cover the medical expenses, and that once the child was born she could obtain benefits from the Women, Infants and Children program (WIC), as well as food stamps and public housing.

Children born in the United States to illegal aliens will ultimately provide the payoff for the Mexican government. Within the next five to 10 years a large segment of the Latino population will reach age 18, causing a dramatic increase in the number of Latino voters.

The education of these children, the cultural mores they accept and ultimately their allegiance or lack thereof to the United States, may well be determined by the environment within the Latino communities.

Marsha Mulroney, a teacher from Santa Ana, Calif. who instructs a class of 30 non-English speaking students, reported in the Orange County Register that she read a piece to her students entitled, "The Grand Ol' Flag." The piece began, "I am your flag, the flag of your country..."

"Several of my brightest students took issue with this saying, 'This is not my flag, mine is Mexico.' Obviously, at 12 years old, this sentiment is not theirs' but their parents'.

"As we celebrated Memorial Day and all the Americans who have given their lives to insure freedom in this country, I could not help but wonder how many of our new immigrants would fight for this country's freedom," she said. "What concerns me is that these children, and their families, enjoy a free education, free breakfast and lunch, free supplies, and free medical care."

Currently, an "anti-gringo" climate prevails where organizations such as MEChA and La Raza, which have promoted the concept of dual citizenship, continue to promote the liberation of "Aztlán."

Some Latinos consider Aztlán, or "Occupied Mexico," to be the American Southwest. The mythical concept relates to the beginning of the Aztecs, that is, the belief that California and the American Southwest constitute the original homeland of the Mexican people.

"El Plan Espiritual De Aztlán," which is the plan to liberate Aztlán, is being widely distributed throughout Latino neighborhoods as well as on college campuses. The doctrinal statement reads as follows:

"In the spirit of a new people that is conscious not only of its proud historical heritage, but also of the brutal 'gringo' invasions of our territories, we the Chicano inhabitants of the northern land of Aztlan, from whence came our forefathers, reclaiming the land of their birth and consecrating the determination of our people of the sun, declare that the call of our blood is our power, our responsibility, and our inevitable destiny.

"We are free and sovereign to determine those tasks which are justly called by our house, our land, the sweat of our brow and by our hearts. Aztlan belongs to those that plant the seeds, water the fields, and gather the crops, and not to the foreign European. We do not recognize capricious frontiers on the bronze continent.

"Brotherhood unites us, and love for our brothers makes us a people whose time has come and who struggles against the foreign 'gabacho' who exploits our riches and destroys our culture. With our hearts in our hands and our hands in the soil, we declare the independence of our mestizo nation. We are a bronze people with a bronze culture. Before the world, before all of North America, before all our brothers in the bronze continent, we are a nation, we are a union of free pueblos, we are Aztlan."

The prescribed education goals within the plan emphasize Mexican history, culture, contribution and bilingual education, as well as community control over schools, teachers, administrators, counselors and programs.

In concert with the Mexican government, these educational goals are currently operative within the state of California.

In San Diego County, a program sponsored by the Mexican government currently utilizes public schools where Mexican teachers instruct students in the Spanish language, Mexican culture and history. This course is considered a replacement for the GED high school equivalent diploma; English and civics are not included in the curriculum.

An investigation by county officials into the San Ysidro school district revealed that "currently, proficiency in Spanish with the preservation of Mexican culture at the expense of English learning, is the governing philosophy of the district. Teachers and administrators who are nonconformists are demoted, fired or eliminated from the system. Non-Spanish speakers are purged, regardless of qualifications or performance."

Through the passage of legislation requiring bilingual education, road signs and voter ballots, Mexican immigrants have no need to immerse themselves in the English language and many children, who were born and raised in the United States, graduate from high school unable to read, write, or speak English. Section 312 of the INS Act requires for citizenship a working knowledge of English. Yet legislation such as AB4123, which mandates that voter ballots be printed in multiple languages, continues to overrule such laws.

However, a constitutional amendment (House Joint Resolution 87) was recently introduced to the Committee on the Judiciary that, if adopted, would stem the tide of illegal immigration. An overview of the amendment states:

I. Citizens of the U.S. shall only be persons born to a parent who is a citizen of the U.S., persons born within the U.S. and to a parent who was lawfully present in and subject to the jurisdiction of the U.S. at the time of that parent's entry into the U.S. and all persons naturalized according to the laws of the U.S.

II. Nothing in this Constitution shall require either the Congress or the States to provide payments or services to any person who is not a citizen of the U.S.

III. No person shall become a naturalized citizen of the U.S. who is not conversant in the English language, except for persons under the age of five, and who has not sworn allegiance to the U.S. over and above allegiance to any other polity.

IV. Representatives shall be appointed among the several States according to their respective numbers counting only the number of citizens of each state.

Although the proposed amendment's chances for passage may be slim, it would be interesting to note which side our legislators would choose in the debate. Would they continue to support the interests of a foreign government over their own?

What Every Parent Needs to Know About Attention Deficit Disorder

In a recent column, Ann Landers said, "Parents need new skills to deal with children with ADD." What "skills," Ann?

ADD (aka ADHD, attention deficit disorder with hyperactivity) has become the most common "disease" of childhood and is spreading like wildfire. Just as in the pre-Salk vaccine era of polio, there is reason to fear for the children. Affecting anywhere from 6 to 33 percent of children in grade school, ADD also strikes adolescents; persists into adult life; can cause school failure, dropping out, aggression, violence, criminality and substance abuse; needs treatment with addictive medications; and is a certifiable disability.

Characterized by inattention, impulsivity and hyperactivity,

ADD is a "brain disease" due to a "chemical imbalance of the brain," diagnosed by a teacher checking off "any eight of 14 behaviors" listed and requiring no physician, laboratory, x-ray or brain-scan confirmation—because there is no confirmation! Skepticism and science are what parents need to deal with ADD, not skill.

In numbers unmatched in any part of the world, U.S. school children are diagnosed and drugged in a quid pro quo association between education and for-profit psychiatry and psychology. By labeling students "brain-diseased," the schools have an excuse for the rampant illiteracy and unpreparedness, cause enough for the mounting unhappiness and failure of the children, while psychiatry /psychology gains lifetime patients.

Parents, wake up! Do you really believe that your child, seemingly normal until age 8 (the average age at diagnosis), has a "brain disease" due to "chemical imbalance of the brain" as diagnosed by the teacher? I don't think so.

As a child neurologist for 35 years, I have authored original descriptions of real diseases characterized by objective abnormalities. Witnessing the burgeoning numbers of school children said to have ADD and made to take brain-altering drugs, I have found I can validate none of it.

In three years of trying, I have been unable to extract from Ciba-Geigy, manufacturers of Ritalin, references to any articles proving that ADD is a real disease. On Sept. 23, 1993, I testified at the National Institutes of Health that ADD, conduct disorder and oppositional defiant disorder—the so-called disruptive behavior disorders (DBDs)—are not proven diseases, organic or biologic, and that therefore, it would be unethical and fatally flawed scientifically to proceed with research into biological interventions, such as drugs.

On Nov. 17, 1994, I wrote David Kessler, M.D., commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration, and asked how they could allow Ciba-Geigy to portray ADD in the Ritalin insert as a "syndrome," a term meaning the same thing as "disease."

The FDA response: "We acknowledge...that as yet no distinct pathophysiology for the disorder has been delineated." This affirmed my conclusion — that ADD is not a proven disease. To the extent that it allows Ciba-Geigy to perpetuate the illusion of a disease by calling it a real "disease"—necessary, of course, to sell Ritalin—the FDA is in collusion with the manufacturer that it is supposed to monitor and regulate.

To understand how ADD, not a disease at all, became the most common "disease" of childhood, and why its numbers double every four to seven years, and why the Drug Enforcement Agency quota for Ritalin has risen from 1700 kilograms in 1990 to 8000 kilograms in 1995, one has to understand the following:

The power of advertising; the ties of psychiatry to the drug industry; "provider-induced need"; what Brumback calls the "Chinese cookbook" approach to diagnosing, whereby psychiatry's Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Disorders, with 292 diagnoses as of 1992 was considering 94 new ones; and the dire straits in which psychiatry finds itself, being forced more rapidly than any other medical specialty to down size and reconfigure along the lines of rapidly advancing "managed care" HMOs. Credible estimates have it that in mental health, fully under managed care, one-half of the nation's 38,000 psychiatrists may be unnecessary.

If your child is not reading at his or her grade level, is frustrated, increasingly unhappy, inattentive or even disruptive, there is no "diagnosis" or "pill." To eradicate these diseases, we must get the medical/psychiatric/psychologic model out of the classroom and commit, once again, to the proposition that the child can and must read at an age/grade appropriate level and that they are educable, and must be educated.

Parents, if an ADD diagnosis is applied to your child, assert that it is not a disease and that representing it as such is false, a breach of "informed consent" and "malpractice."

by Robert Gaylon Ross, Sr.

This book gives a brief history of the Bilderbergs, Council on Foreign Relations, Trilateral Commission, Skull & Bones Society, and Committee of 300. It lists these members by name, secret organizations that they belong to, their "day job" title and their affiliation. It then sorts these members by affiliation to reveal the stranglehold that they have over our federal government, our courts, the Federal Reserve System, banks, foundations, think tanks, investment houses, universities, law firms, book publishing, news magazines, newspapers, television networks, industry, and labor unions.

The average federal entitlement recipient collected $10,320 in benefits in 1990 — and the payments get bigger as you move up the income scale. This is America's other welfare state: Washington spent $177 billion on entitlements for the poor last year, but it spent $612 billion on entitlements for everyone else.

The middle class is at the heart of the budget problem and it must also be at the heart of the solution. Entitlements now represent 54% of all federal outlays, or $789 billion last year. Worse, apart from interest on the federal debt, they are the only growing part of the budget. COMPUTER SNOOPERS

Many Americans don't realize that federal agencies will attempt to use the Oklahoma City bombing to expand and test their high-technology citizens surveillance net. Under existing guidelines, the feds will soon be able to collect, collate, and analyze even the smallest of financial transactions. Even before the bombing, construction of this spy-net has proceeded with little or no public debate or disclosure.

To date, the Clintonites have pushed for citizen surveillance under the rubric of "reinventing government." Federal snooping will now be expanded in the name of fighting terrorism, pursued under color of authority and through regulatory fiat — aided and abetted by politicians fearful of being tagged as "soft on law enforcement."

My colleague Mark Nestmann, editor of the highly-respected (and increasingly important) Low Profile newsletter, cites an all-too-typical example. The Los Angeles FBI recently conducted thousands of

MEDIA CONTROL

On February 26, there was a nationally-syndicated column by Richard Cohen which I read in the Denver Post.

"Early in my career," Cohen wrote, "I worked for UPI at the New York headquarters. Among other things, I had to tell various Teletype operators when to send out certain stories and to which parts of the country. I had my instructions, of course, and one of them went like this: 'No U.N. news west of the Mississippi.'" Yes, the big press knowingly engages in selective coverage — even selective dissemination of news. Moreover, Cohen wasn't the least ashamed or resentful in the article, except at people opposed to the U.N.

CHOW FOR CHINA

Most media focus has been on copyrights violations and threatened U.S. trade sanctions. We should look elsewhere. Here is a country with 22% of the world's population and only 7% of its arable land. Industrialization has led to the conversion of cropland to non-farm use in China.

Result? A serious shortage of grain. China imported a record 6.1 million tons of grain between mid-December and mid-January. Population increase has been accompanied by a 50% increase in personal income during the last four years.

The world has never seen 1.2 billion people moving up the food chain at one time. China has a $23 billion trade surplus with the U.S. and is now in a position to buy all America's surplus grain currently exported to 100 other countries. Try to imagine 1.2 billion Chinese competing with us for our grain as food prices keep rising in the supermarket. You can begin to see the political fallout.

PHONICS GETS THE HOOK

The Federal Trade Commission (with encouragement from the "education" establishment) has attacked the Hooked on Phonics reading program. The FTC claims that Gateway Educational Products, Ltd. is guilty of false advertising for their popular phonics course.

Education expert Samuel Blumenfeld (The Blumenfeld Education Letter, P.O. Box 45161, Boise, Idaho 83711) is skeptical of the FTC's claims. He said, "The FTC is being manipulated and used by the educationist 'experts' who favor whole language. They have a monopoly on the reading programs in the government schools, and now they want to use the power of government to curtail the sale of phonics programs in the private marketplace."

Blumenfeld added, "A secondary result of the Hooked on Phonics advertising campaign is that the word 'phonics' has gotten so much publicity, that more and more parents are asking why the public schools no longer stress phonics. This has alarmed the educationists to the point where they decided that Hooked on Phonics had to be discredited."

TV producer Richard Thompson said, "Being in the advertising industry, I am always skeptical of claims made in ads and generally find that my skepticism is with (the) foundation...Of the ads I've responded to, two have lived up to their promise. One of them is Hooked on Phonics."

VERY WARY OF BARRY

District of Columbia Mayor Marion Barry continues to flirt with the "violence" card in a dangerous game of chicken with his political opponents and the GOP Congress. Examples: Barry has threatened to withdraw police protection from the wards of two D.C. council members who opposed his tax increase (he denied the threat until confronted with a TV interview transcript). Barry has also barnstormed the District, telling audiences that the city's new congressionally-controlled financial control board is another chapter in black history, where their culture, language and history are being stolen by those who enslaved them, "but (they) can't break our spirit." The mayor's shenanigans are worrying D.C. residents (black and white) who stand to get caught in any violence sparked by Barry's explosive rhetoric.

"A sound monetary policy is the key to a prosperous economy, but the Republicans have no interest in monetary reform. Recall that it was a Republican president who sealed the fate of the gold standard, giving us two decades of rapidly declining purchasing power.

AL HAMILTON UPDATE

Political prisoner Al Hamilton of Darby, Mont. has been in the Ravalli County Jail since April 7, 1995, charged with felony intimidation for allegedly using foul language towards Darby Town Marshal Larry Rose when Rose attempted to arrest Hamilton's daughter Lynne for having expired plates on her vehicle.

Bond for this felony thought-crime was set by our old friend Judge Jeff Langton at $100,000, lowered from the original $250,000 set three months ago. After ten days of no food, Hamilton has now ended his hunger strike, and is seeking a further bond reduction. The family has few resources for bond or legal defenses.

Hamilton has spoken out against government abuse in the area for decades. He admits to calling the Darby marshal a "son of a (expletive)," but denies making any threats or attempting to intimidate the officer.

With very little income, the family could use some assistance until Al can be freed.

If you would like to help, please send whatever donation you can to Al's wife Karen c/o Box 153, Darby 29 Montana (Zip Exempt)

If readers would like to write to Al, he could use some words of encouragement. He can be contacted by mail c/o the Ravalli County Jail, Hamilton, Mont., 59840.

"COP OF THE MONTH CLUB"

Just a "Good O Boy" road trip gone awry, perhaps, but an undercover DEA agent in Houston, Texas is our "Cop of The Month" for getting into a gunfight with the manager of a topless bar over having to pay a $5 cover charge.

According to police reports, early Sunday 30 July, Special Agent Pete Sinclair was on a bus with 40 other law enforcement officers, federal agents and friends touring Houston's downtown bars as part of agent Sinclair's bachelor party. A bouncer told Sinclair that he and his fellow agents would have to pay the $5 cover charge to enter the bar.

Sinclair was shot twice when he pulled his 9mm pistol on the armed manager of the establishment. Police say Sinclair fired first and the manager was hit with at least five rounds from the allegedly drunk DEA agent's weapon. DEA agents headquarters in Washington are headed to Houston to investigate the case.

RUNNER-UP FOR "COP OF THE MONTH CLUB"

E. Michael Kahoe, FBI Special Agent in Charge (SAC) of the Jacksonville, Fla. field office is runner-up this month for getting caught destroying the "afteraction report" of the seige at Ruby Ridge. It seems Kahoe was on the bureau's "shooting review team" investigating itself in an attempt to explain why a woman was shot in the head by an FBI sniper while holding her infant child in her arms. Kahoe has been suspended (with pay) pending an investigation into how the media found out about it.

"First, Kill All The Lawyers"

"A nation's values and problems are mirrored in the ways it uses its ablest people. In Japan, a country only half our size, 30% more engineers graduate each year than in all of the United States. But Japan boasts a total of less than 15,000 lawyers, while American universities graduate 35,000 every year.

It would be hard to claim that these differences have no practical consequences. As Japan puts it, 'Engineers make the pie grow larger; lawyers only decide how to carve it up.'"

MIND CONTROL

In the book "1984," George Orwell warned that people were in danger of losing their freedom of mind without being aware of it while it was happening because of psychological, emotional and intellectual manipulation: mind control. The world of "1984" arrived unnoticed in America. Psychological warfare is being waged against an unsuspecting public. The problems in America are the result of people being led to believe things that are not true. Most people don't pay conscious attention to the things that affect them subconsciously. They don't usually know what to look for. However, when pointed to, these things can be recognized and understood. America has been lulled into a deeeep sleeeeep and it is time to wake up.

The principles of mind control, hypnotic suggestion and mental programming are ancient (the term used doesn't matter, the principles remain the same). The goal is to suspend the thought processes of the conscious mind to cause a state of mind that is similar to day dreaming. Stop conscious thought, and the mind is in its most suggestible state and thereby more receptive to programming.

Think of the times you have caught yourself staring blankly at the television screen, losing all sense of time and place. When you stop conscious thinking and your mind goes blank, this is the hypnotic state of mind. Remember seeing flashing words and numbers in TV commercials? Your eyes lock onto the flashing images, thus inducing hypnosis to reduce resistance to the message being presented by stopping all thought and analysis. Though not consciously perceived, the television screen, while appearing static, actually flickers.

Any repeating light or sound pattern can lead one into an altered state. A hypnotist uses patterned speech by varying the pacing and inflection of his voice to induce this state of mind in his subject. It is in this state of mind where one is the most receptive to mental programming. Whether or not the information takes hold in the mind depends on two factors: trust in the source of the information, and repetition of the message. Trust in the source of the information induces acceptance of the message as true even if it is not understood. Repetition of the message embeds it in the subconscious, so that acceptance of its truth and accuracy becomes a conditioned response. Thus, this information will be accepted as true without thinking about it whenever it is presented again.

Think for a moment about the way newscasters speak and you will realize they all talk the same way regardless of their ethnic background. Whether they be black, white, Hispanic or Oriental, with few exceptions, they all sound alike. The patterned speech of a newscaster is similar to that of a hypnotist. The eye contact made with the viewer is also a hypnotic technique. And a newscaster is also an accepted and respected authority figure, thus encouraging acceptance of the information presented as true and accurate.

Studies over the years have demonstrated that many people, especially young people, unquestioningly accept the reality presented by television. Popular culture (movies, television and music) carries messages about how society works and how people should behave. Entertainment is not value-free. It has ideological content and presents a world view that influences those who watch the programming. The population has been conditioned by a mass-media created culture. Long-term exposure to this artificial reality cannot help but have an enormous impact on the social and political life of the nation. Add to this the inherent nature of television to induce the hypnotic state of mind regardless of content, and you have the most potent instrument for mass persuasion in the history of the world.

On June 22, 1956 the British Broadcasting Corp. experimented with projecting subliminal images on television. Pictures were flashed on the screen too quickly to be seen consciously, but they did make an impression on the subconscious. Subliminal perception is the process whereby you receive and respond to visual and sound information without being aware of it. The message, in the form of printed words, pictures or voices, is presented either so rapidly or so faintly that you are not consciously aware of having seen or heard anything. The BBC experiment was followed by an experiment by the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. doing the same thing: projecting subliminal images. In the U.S., TV station WTWO in Bangor, Maine conducted a similar experiment in November, 1957.

Experiments were not limited to television. In 1958, radio station WAAF in Chicago broadcast "subaudible" commercials. Seattle's KOL broadcast barely audible taped messages "below" the music played by its disk jockeys. Marketing researcher and psychologist James Vicary tested subliminal ads in a New Jersey movie theater. "Hungry? Eat Popcorn" and "Drink Coca-Cola" were flashed on the screen at 1/3000 of a second every five seconds during the movie. Sales increased for popcorn and Coca-Cola. Every major advertising agency has sponsored extensive research into subliminal perception. Vance Packard's 1957 book "The Hidden Persuaders" revealed that American industry was researching the use of subliminal messages to motivate people to buy their products. Dr. Wilson Bryan Key has written four books exposing the widespread use of subliminal ads by the advertising industry.

Even children are exploited for profit. According to an ad executive, "When you sell a kid on your product, if he can't get it, he will throw himself on the floor, stamp his feet, and cry. You can't get a reaction like that out of an adult." Research on children begins as early as ages two and three using the psychological techniques of finger sensors, eye-tracking and brain-wave measurements.

Using what was called the Precon Process, the picture of a skull and the word BLOOD were flashed subliminally on the screen in the 1958 movie "My World Dies Screaming." Some words and images trigger strong emotional responses in people. Laboratory experiments show that people will react to words like BLOOD and to pictures of skulls with indications of heightened emotions such as quickened pulse, faster breathing and sweating palms.

The "Exorcist" used both subliminal sounds and pictures. A full-screen death mask of Father Karras was flashed on the screen at 1/48th of a second during the movie. The terrified squealing of pigs being slaughtered and the buzzing sound of angry bees was mixed into the soundtrack. People actually fainted in response to this movie, many became nauseated and many had nightmares. Note that William Peter Blatty, the author of the novel and producer of the movie, was a CIA operative who served as the policy-branch chief of the Psychological Warfare Division of the United States Air Force.

"The foundation of film art is editing," wrote the Russian film director Pudovkin in the preface of the German edition of his book on film techniques. In an experiment at the Moscow Film School, Lev Kuleshov created the impression of a single actress by joining the face of one woman, the torso of another, the hands of another and the legs of yet another. An anonymous British film technician is quoted in a front-page article in the London Tribune August 5, 1949 saying: "We claim that with judicious cutting and an adroit use of camera angles, it is simple to make a fool of anybody. We can distort the emphasis and meaning of Minister's speeches not only by cutting out statements but by simple use of long shot, medium shot and close-up. For any statement said in close-up is given greater significance on the screen than one said in long shot. There is no end to the tricks we can play with this simple device."

A picture may be worth a thousand words, but it can also deceive one into believing something that is not true. Some of the most spectacular footage of the San Francisco earthquake and fire in 1906 was faked.

Newsreel companies often staged events. During the Mexican Revolution in 1914, they made arrangements with Pancho Villa to fight his battles in daylight and to wait until the cameras were in place before launching his attack. Much of the newsreel coverage of World War I was faked. Literary Digest printed an expose in its November 13, 1915 issue. The practice of faking scenes of celebrities by employing impersonators was frequently used by The March of Time screen magazine. Known instances of content manufacture, re-creation and personality impersonation are documented by Raymond Fielding in "The American Newsreel." The capacity to lie with a picture and be undetected has been greatly enhanced by modern computer technology.

On October 30, 1938 thousands of people fled from a crisis that had no existence except in their imaginations. A radio broadcast of H.G. Wells' "War of the Worlds" led thousands of listeners to believe that the planet earth had been invaded by Martians! "we are ready to believe almost anything if it comes from a recognized authority," writes Howard Koch in his book, "The Panic Broadcast." Koch wrote the radio script performed by Orson Welles and his Mercury Theater on CBS.

Produced on videotape for realism, the 1983 made-for-TV movie "Special Bulletin" about terrorists exploding an atomic bomb in Charleston, S.C. looks and sounds like a real news broadcast in every detail. Like the radio broadcast of "The War of the Worlds," the cast of characters include the anchorperson(s), and correspondents reporting from the field and outside "experts" brought in to comment on new developments. In both instances, despite disclaimers, people thought they were listening to an authentic newscast.

Motion pictures were an effective propaganda weapon during both world wars. German Chief of Staff Erich Ludendorff, writing in 1917, said: "The war has demonstrated the superiority of the photograph and the film as a means of information and persuasion."

Lenin considered the cinema the most important of the arts and established a state school for cinematography two years after the Communist takeover of Russia. "Molding the feeling and intelligence of the masses is one of our political problems and for this end we find the movies most effective," said Russian film director Sergei Eisenstein. All totalitarian movements are vitally concerned with the indoctrination of the population, particularly the young people of the nation. Because of this, the arts are of great importance. Art is a way of seeing. What we see in art defines what we understand to be "reality." The most successful propaganda uses the arts as a weapon to influence and control the thinking and behavior of the target population.

The power of music has been recognized throughout history. According to Confucius, "If one should desire to know whether a kingdom is well-governed, if its morals are good or bad, the quality of its music will furnish the answer." Change in musical style is inevitably followed by a change in politics and morality. Change swept Western civilization, not just America, in the 1960's that was brought about by change in popular music. Plato and Aristotle believed that people could be controlled by music. In Nazi Germany, the government used music to create a state of mind in the German people. In Orwell's "1984," music is tightly controlled because of its power to communicate and influence behavior.

Your entire body is sensitive to sound. Sound causes changes in body chemistry, blood pressure, breathing and digestion. Fast music will speed up the nervous system while slow music will slow it down. Sounds vibrate in different parts of the body. Low tones will vibrate in the lower parts of the body, and high tones will vibrate in the higher portions and on into the head. Much of today's popular rock music is built around a heavy bass pattern louder than the melody. These low-frequency vibrations reverberate in the lower parts of the body so that the music "feels" good. These loud, low-frequency vibrations and the driving beat of most rock music affect the pituitary gland, which controls male and female sexual responses. The repeating sound pattern induces the hypnotic state of mind that is similar to day dreaming, thus clearing the mind of all thought so that the message can be implanted in the subconscious without resistance.

It is important to note that the lyrics of many rock songs are not clearly distinguishable consciously. When you do not hear the message clearly, you cannot make the conscious choice to accept or reject it. When you cannot make that choice or when that choice is taken away from you, the message is programmed directly to the subconscious, thus circumventing analysis and choice in accepting the content of the message. Sixties rock superstar Jimi Hendrix said: "You can hypnotize people with music, and when you get them at their weakest point, you can preach into their subconscious whatever you want to say."

Although the message of some rock music is thoughtful and positive, the message of many rock videos and the music, particularly "heavy metal," is a negative mental program that glorifies violence and deviant behavior. Recurring themes are preoccupied with violence, rape, sadomasochism, suicide, illicit sex, drug and alcohol abuse, fascination with the occult and, in some instances, race antagonism. Long-term exposure to negative messages cannot help but have a profoundly damaging influence on people, especially young people.

Many ancient civilizations recognized that music plays an important role in determining the character and direction of society. They also believed that music possesses a tangible power that could be applied to bring about change within an individual or society as a whole. Such power in the hands of evil or ignorant men would have dire consequences for society.

The purpose of propaganda is to direct public attention to certain "facts." "The whole art consists in doing this so skillfully that everyone will be convinced that the fact is real," wrote Adolf Hitler in "Mein Kampf." He described the principles of effective propaganda: it must be aimed at the emotions; it must be limited to a few points; it must repeat those points over and over again until the public believes it. To be effective, propaganda must constantly short-circuit all conscious thinking and operate on the individual subconsciously.

The principles behind "The Big Lie" of propaganda are the same principles of mind control, hypnotic suggestion and mental programming: distraction and repetition. Distraction focuses the attention of the conscious mind on one or more of the five senses in order to stop conscious thinking, thus producing the hypnotic state of mind. Repetition of the message constitutes mental programming. Propaganda draws attention away from information that is true and directs attention to information that is false. It is accomplished scientifically.

In 1936, a movie used hypnotic suggestion to give the audience instructions to do something. That movie was "Reefer Madness." Shown widely on college campuses and at midnight screenings across the country since 1972, "Reefer Madness" uses hypnotic techniques to both encourage marijuana use

"Frighted with False Fire."

It is strange and disturbing that thousands of Americans, secure in their homes on a quiet Sunday evening, could be scared out of their wits by a radio dramatization of H. G. Wells' fantastic old story, "The War of the Worlds."

We're sure the 23-year-old actor, Orson Welles, didn't realize the panic he was spreading from coast to coast among people who believed that monsters from Mars actually had invaded New Jersey.

Yet young Mr. Welles, a student of Shakespeare, might have remembered Hamlet and, remembering, might have foreseen the effect of too much dramatic realism on an audience already strung to high nervous tension.

Hamlet it was who staged a play to "catch the conscience" of the King of Denmark, his uncle, who had murdered Hamlet's father, seized the throne and married the widowed queen. This play within a play also concerned the murder of a king. And, as Hamlet had intended, his uncle and his mother were driven to such hysterical terror that they refused to watch it to the end.

"What, frightened with false fire!" exclaimed Hamlet with bitter scorn, certain now of his uncle's guilt.

Unlike Hamlet, young Mr. Welles did not plan deliberately to demoralize his audience. And no guilty consciences, but nerves made jittery by actual, though almost incredible, threats of war and disaster, had prepared a good many American radio listeners to believe the completely incredible "news" that Martian hordes were here.

Of course it should never happen again. But we don't agree with those who are arguing that the Sunday night scare shows a need for strict government censorship of radio programs.

On the contrary, we think it is evidence of how dangerous political control of radio might become. If so many people could be misled unintentionally, when the purpose was merely to entertain, what could designing politicians not do through control of broadcasting stations.

The dictators in Europe use radio to make their people believe falsehoods. We want nothing like that here. Better have American radio remain free to make occasional blunders than start on a course that might, in time, deprive it of freedom to broadcast uncensored truth.

And it should be easy for radio to avoid repeating this particular blunder. The Columbia system, as a result of its unhappy experience Sunday night, has already pointed the way. Let all chains, all stations, avoid use of the news broadcasting technique in dramatizations when there is any possibility of any listener mistaking fiction for fact.

and promote anti-marijuana legislation.

The stated intent of "Reefer Madness" was to stamp out the menace of marijuana because it leads to "acts of shocking violence, ending often in incurable insanity." In contrast, young people are shown having a good time smoking marijuana, partying, dancing, kissing and retreating to the bedroom. By showing young people having a good time smoking marijuana, "Reefer Madness" encourages young people to at least try it. By confusing marijuana with heroin and by telling the story of normal kids going berserk because of marijuana, "Reefer Madness" scares older people into demanding that government do something.

Speaking to a PTA meeting, a high school principal, Dr. Carroll, commands parents to stamp out this "assassin of our youth." When Dr. Carroll begins to speak, he raises a sheet of paper in front of him and reads certain "facts" from it. The white sheet of paper prominent in the middle of the screen is a distraction for the eyes to lock onto in order to induce the hypnotic state of mind while information is programmed to the audience verbally. A hypnotist leads his subject into this state of mind by placing a bright object in front of his eyes and causing him to gaze upon it with persistent attention.

Dr. Carroll delivers his lines with a hypnotic rhythm that is punctuated by changes in pacing, volume and tone (just like a hypnotist). He speaks with authority and looks into the camera and into the eyes of the audience; both are hypnotic techniques.

In the book "Outsiders," Howard S. Becker describes how the Federal Bureau of Narcotics under Harry Anslinger created the marijuana problem to cause the public to demand legislation. There are striking similarities between an article written by Anslinger that appeared in the July 1937 issue of The American Magazine entitled "Marijuana - Assassin of Youth" and the content of the movie "Reefer Madness."

For example, from the article: "In 1931, the marijuana file of the United States Narcotics Bureau was less than two inches thick, while today the reports crowd many large cabinets." Compare this to what appeared in the movie. Dr. Carroll is with a government agent who says: "Let me show you something. In 1930, the records on marijuana filled a small folder like this (less than two inches thick). Today, they fill cabinets." The camera shows us a wall lined with file cabinets. "Atrocity" stories that were first reported by the Bureau also appear in "Reefer Madness."

This movie was part of a well-orchestrated propaganda campaign that included newspapers, magazines and radio. In 1937, about a year after the release of the movie, the Marijuana Tax Act was signed into law with a major effect being to drive prices up for marijuana to make its cultivation and distribution profitable. The strategy used is a classic example of Hegelian Dialectics - a method to bring about change in a three-step process. The first step is to create a problem. The second step is to create opposition to the problem - an opposing force that will serve as a catalyst for action. The third step is to offer the solution that will lead to a predetermined goal, thus bringing about change that would have been impossible to impose on people without proper psychological conditioning.

The relationship between the increase in crime and violence and the decrease in individual rights is another example of this strategy in action. A progressively more graphic depiction of violence in movies, television and music desensitizes people, especially young people, to real-life violence and increases tension, anxiety and fear among older people who are encouraged to demand that government do something.

By causing emotional stress and mental confusion, judgment is impaired and suggestibility increased. Under these conditions people allow their rights to be diminished for the promise of security. There can be no doubt about the causal relationship between media violence and what is happening in cities and towns across the nation

"The nearly complete monopoly of mass communications is generally agreed to be one of the most striking characteristics of totalitarian dictatorships," wrote President Carter's National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski in the book "Totalitarian Dictatorship and Autocracy." There could be no effective propaganda without mass media. The consolidation of ownership of the press, publishing, radio, TV and film makes the coordination of propaganda possible. Former national editor at The Washington Post and dean of the Graduate School of Journalism at the University of California at Berkeley, Ben Bagdikian, has documented the consolidation of ownership of mass media in "The Media Monopoly."

The 1940 Republican Presidential candidate Wendell L. Wilkie was chairman of the board of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation in 1942. William P. Rogers, secretary of state during the Nixon administration, was on the board of directors of Twentieth Century-Fox as well as former President Gerald R. Ford and Henry Kissinger. Former Vice President Walter F. Mondale was a member of the board of directors of Columbia Pictures and former Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig, Jr. was on the board of directors of MGM/UA Entertainment Company.

Entertainment is not just entertainment. It is also propaganda. In Orwell's "1984," every room contains a television screen that floods people's minds with a constant flow of information. The primary means for controlling people is the control of information. According to Homer Simpson, the answers to life's problems are on TV. And like the cartoon character, the American people have been programmed to look to the media for their answers as well. When enough people understand how they are controlled, the control will end.

NO NEED TO PAY INCOME TAXES

Let Irwin Schiff, Americas's leading authority on the income tax and how the government illegally collects it (he has over 400,000 books in circulation on the subject) show you — in his latest 305-page book — why and how you can:

1. Immediately stop paying income taxes, a tax that no one residing in the U.S. is required, by law, to pay (though people residing outside the U.S. might be subject to the tax).
2. Get back all of the income taxes you paid in 1994 (if you haven't as yet filed a return for that year) and how you can get back all 1995 income taxes you might have already paid;
3. Immediately stop employers from withholding income taxes from your pay;
4. Remove IRS liens and stop IRS agents from seizing your property, since they have no lawful power or authority to do either; and much, much more.

Isn't it about time you stopped voluntarily subsidizing all of those government programs you know are unconstitutional and which only undermine America's standard of living? Fourteenth Amendment: Fact or Fiction? A slave of a slave descendent

That common law is common right; and that common right is the great charter privileges, confirmed. 9 Hen 3.29. 25 Edw. 3.8 Coke Inst. 2, p. 56.

The Root of the Bill of Rights, Vol. 1, ed. Bernard Schwartz, New York; Chelsea House, 1980, p. 151.

The above statement is true in one's indigenous homeland, and where one derives and retains his own birthright.

"Judgment also will I lay on the line, and righteousness to the plummet; and the hail shall sweep away the refuse of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding place" (Isaiah 28:17 KJV).

What are the "refuse of lies" that shall be "swept away"? One is that Congress has the supposed power to create an artificial citizenry. Another is that Congress has the supposed power to take what was previously property under the law, and give it a legal artificial personality (making it an artificial entity, such as a corporation).

In other words, giving African slaves and slaves descendants a legal status as a "person" under the Fourteenth Amendment, as opposed to property.

From the viewpoint of natural law, can Congress/government legislate concerning something that has no substance, and give it substance? Can the same Congress/government legislate concerning something that has substance, and say that it now has no substance?

I have learned, as I am involved in a lawsuit against this government, who not only made me a slave (not just my ancestors), but made the law say that since I availed myself of the benefits of a statute (such as the 13th, 14th and 15th amendments, civil rights acts, the Social Security Act, all forms of licensing), that I have no standing in court to challenge the constitutionality of these or other statutes. This is pure and simple ENTRAPMENT.

If one only presents the history to the courts, without a legal basis, it becomes only a political question. Therefore, the bottom line is one must have a legal, not a political, controversy. In looking into the constitutionality of the 14th Amendment, see 14 Stat. 338 (1866), which states:

"Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of both houses concurring), that the following article be proposed to the legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of state legislatures, shall be valid as a part of the Constitution, namely: Article XIV..." Resolution proposing the 14th Amendment, 14 Stat. 358 (1866).

The ultimate question remains: Is the 14th Amendment a part of the United States? Or rather, is it constitutionally a part of the original organic law? The original resolution which proposed the 14th Amendment to the several states' legislatures for ratification contained this clause which does not appear in the reprints of the United States Constitution.

The unscrupulous way in which the ratification was achieved? By MARTIAL LAW, MILITARY OCCUPATION, thus creating special privileges, such as land ownership; or authorizing something illegal to avoid the principals set by the common law, such as franchisement of non-citizens (small "c", African slaves and slave descendants) into the body politic; disfranchisement of free white State Citizens (big "C" members of the Sovereignty) from the body politic.

Let's look at the legal side of these questions. We know several things about the 14th Amendment in relation to Congress by the original Constitution for the United States of America, including the Bill of Rights.

We know what the amendment was designed to do, and that it does do the following things:

1. It violates the Preamble, which defines the whole intent of all powers granted to Congress by introducing a foreign member into a sovereign body (African slaves and slave descendants).

2. It is an ex post facto law, punishing southerners in many ways for acts not necessarily illegal at the time of their commission.

3. It is a bill of attainder (in its lesser form of a bill of pains and penalties) depriving all southern slave holders of property without trial under the judicial power.

4. It deprived southerners of property by unreasonable seizure without just compensation, bringing Congress beyond limitations set out by the Fourth and Fifth Articles in Amendment (Bill of Rights).

5. It lays prohibitions upon the States beyond those known to the original Constitution of the United States and makes inroads upon the constitutions of the several States, encroaching upon sovereignty belonging to the people of the several States, which is prohibited by the 10th Article in Amendment (Bill of Rights).

6. It created purely legislative tribunals without respect to the separation of powers as mandated by the Constitution for the United States of America.

7. It extended Congress' MARTIAL LAW power, allowing the emission of bills of credit.

The first people that were placed (and are still under) this perpetual MARTIAL LAW were the African slaves and slave descendants by way of the FREEDMEN BUREAU BILL (DOCUMENTS OF AMERICA, 215, VOTE OF THE FREEDMEN'S BUREAU BILL, Feb. 19, 1866, p. 462 (Richardson, ed. Messages and Papers, vol. ?, p. 398 ff).

Therefore, under the 14th Amendment, and under the third form of MARTIAL LAW which is MARTIAL LAW RULE, and under the FREEDMEN BUREAU BILL, all of this was supposed to grant me citizenship (small "c"), but what it did was to place me under PERPETUAL SLAVERY.

They would use my race as an excuse, for necessity, to declare emergencies to enforce martial law upon my people and yours, stripping both the black and white races of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Necessity (emergency) is the plea of every infringement of human liberty; it is the argument of tyrants; it is the creed of slaves; thereby sucking the free white State Citizen into this MARTIAL LAW, trying to do away with their birth rights.

We know that the United States government is one of enumerated powers only, and that specific prohibitions were placed on those powers by Article 1, Section 9, and the articles of the Bill of Rights, Constitution for the United States of America.

Of course, the main points that I am interested in are the prohibitions laid on Congress. Congress has no power to pass any bill of attainder of ex post facto law, "to make law which unreasonably deprives the Citizen of property or deprives the Citizen of security in his person or effect; to encroach upon a State's sovereignty retained at the adoption of the Constitution for the United States of America, or to make any law taking property for public use without just compensation.

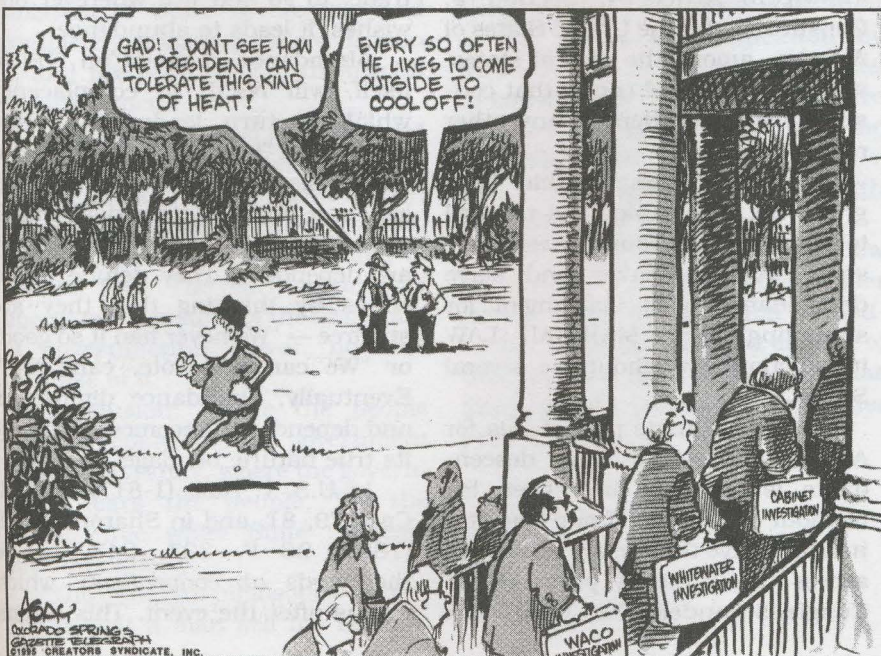

The fact is, Congress exceeded and still exceeds the powers granted to it and violated prohibitions laid against it, in several areas, and had absolutely no right, power or authority to purpose such legislation.

From the foregoing Preamble to the resolution purposing the 14th Amendment, we see that Congress proposed it, and it was intended that the several States' legislatures would ratify it.

What Congress has done is create an ARTIFICIAL FORM of citizenship by way of MARTIAL LAW. Having just discovered true status in America, which is an ARTIFICIAL FEDERAL STATUTORY 14th AMENDMENT person (an artificial entity) who falls within the definition of "person" under a military jurisdiction exercised by Article 1 tribunals (magistrates courts) under the regional venue of the Social Security Act (social insurance) and the Internal Revenue Code's definition of "person," without choice of knowledge, nor disclosure by this government about my true status, and that because of this status, I have no standing to challenge the statutory definition of "person," because I unknowingly availed myself of the benefits of these statutes, through indictments of fraud and entrapment, therefore, my condition is INVOLUNTARY SERVITUDE.

No one asked me or my race if we wanted to be a federal citizen or to carry a legal personality, second class or otherwise.

If I am a citizen, why would a citizen need any form of legislation to give them a natural God-given right? Either they have the birth-right and unalienable rights, or they are a slave, for a person with no birthright or unalienable right is a slave. I did not know that there are two forms of citizenship in America, nor that the lesser of the two commonly called U.S. citizenship (small "c") was created under the 14th Amendment to the Constitution. The other, State Citizenship (Citizenship of the several States, capital "C"), was created under Article 4 of the Constitution. Yet numerous courts of law recognized the differences. Note the following case law:

K. Tashiro v. Jordan, (California Supreme Court, 1927) 256__p. 245; Madden v. Kentucky, (1940), 309 U.S. 83, 84 L. Ed. 590 @ 594.

In Tashiro v. Jordan, the court stated, "That there is a citizenship of the United States and a citizenship of a state, and the privileges and immunities of one are not the same as the other is well established by the decisions of the courts of this country."

Before and after the Civil War Amendment (14th Amendment) to the Federal Constitution, it was not necessary for a free white State Citizen to be a Citizen of his States.

See Crosse v. Board of Elections (Maryland Supreme Court, 1966), 221 A. 2d. 431, @ 433: "State citizenship, as used in the constitutional qualifications for this office, was meant to be synonymous with domicile, and that citizenship of the United States is not required."

In Sharon v. Hall (1885), 26 F. 337, 343, if one notices the words "some one of them," he or she will discover that this refers to the citizenship of "some one" of the States. The State can only make anyone they choose a citizen of their State, but only those of the white race could be recognized as national Citizens under the Preamble to the Constitution for the United States of America, and be treated as a Citizen (big "C") in any State they entered.

See "An Act to Establish as Uniform Rule of Naturalization," approved March 26, 1790, Ch. 3, 1 Stat. 103. The act states, "Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress Assembled, that any alien being a free white person, who shall have resided within the limits and under the jurisdiction of the United States for the term of two years, may be admitted to become a citizen thereof, on application to any common law court of record in any one of the states wherein he shall have resided for the term of one year at least...thereupon such person shall be considered as a citizen of the United States."

Thus, only free white state Citizens hold birthrights, and the privileges, and the unalienable rights, as well as the immunities known to Article 4, Section 2, Constitution for the United States of America, among the several states, and no state could confer that constitutional protection on any other race.

What is amazing is that Congress, not being God, has the gall to say that they found these "persons" (African slaves and slave descendants) a fit instrument for spreading their MARTIAL LAW jurisdiction throughout the several States.

The unfortunate part of this for African slaves and slave descendants is that we have been led (without knowledge of our true status) to believe that we are allowed to access the arbitrary power of the Congress under the Civil War

Amendment. This is why African slaves and slave descendants in America have no rights.

Under this definition of person by way of the 14th Amendment, the Social Security Act and the IRC, we have no independent judicial power to protect us, and can only depend on legislative power under a martial-law jurisdiction.

The 14th Amendment attempts to reverse this natural common-law order of things by making State Citizens dependent upon national citizenship. Liberty is that delicate area between the force (martial law/military jurisdiction) of government and freewill of man. Liberty brings freedom of choice to work, to trade, to go and live wherever one wishes; it leads to abundance.

Abundance, if made an end in itself, will result in complacency which in turn leads to apathy. Apathy is a "let George do it" philosophy. This always brings dependency. For a period of time, dependents are often not aware that they are dependent. They delude themselves by thinking that they are still free — "We never had it so good" or "We can still vote, can't we?" Eventually, abundance diminishes and dependency becomes known by its true nature: bondage!

In U.S. v. Hall, (1-817) 26 Fed. Case 79, 81, and in Sharon v. Hall (1885) 26 F. 337, 343, notice the words ab conventienti, which means after the event. This means after the constitutional convention. Also notice the words ipso facto, which interprets as after the sovereignty was established, composed only of members of the white race (family).

They did not use the words nunc pro tunc, which means to do what should have been done in the beginning.

In other words, they are not saying they made a mistake by not including other races to be Citizens when the Constitution was framed. This section of the 14th Amendment (Section 1) totally dissolves the State's own sovereign body, it is in violation of State sovereignty and completely violates Article 4 Section 2, and the Ninth and 10th Articles in Amendment.

I am sick and tired of being used as a "necessity" (emergency) for infringement of any human's liberty, as well as the argument of tyrants, and for the continual spreading of martial law. The early history of liberty is the history of the limitation of governmental power, not the increase of it.

I am sick and tired of being used as a "necessity" (emergency) for infringement of any human's liberty, as well as the argument of tyrants, and for the continual spreading of martial law. The early history of liberty is the history of the limitation of governmental power, not the increase of it.

Conclusion: Where the people (We the People) fear the government you have tyranny, where the government fears the people, We the People, free white State Citizens, you have liberty.

"The modern philosophy of the law is that a man sell his services but not himself," as was pointed out in Kadis v. Britt, 224 NC 154, 29 SE 2d 543.

"If men, through fear, fraud or mistake, should terms renounce or give up any natural right (in their own land, birthright, unalienable God-given rights — which is what the free white State Citizen has done by way of their membership in Social Security, which means that they are not full-fledged Citizens but now have the lesser form of citizenship, the lesser form being that of statutory civil rights privileges, because they too fall within the statutory definition of a "person"), the eternal law of reason and the grand end of society would absolutely vacate such renunciation.

The right to freedom being a gift of ALMIGHTY GOD, it is not in the power of man to alienate this gift and voluntarily become a slave." — Samuel Adams, 1772.

LAW MARTIAL PROCEDURE FOR AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION: Two-thirds of Congress proposes an amendment, three-fourths of the state legislatures ratify the amendment, the amendment becomes part of the national Constitution.

COMMON LAW PROCEDURE FOR AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION: Application of two-thirds of the state legislatures shall call a convention (assemble the people — We the People — whites), then the amendment is presented to the full Congress for two-thirds vote, then to the states for ratification by three-fourths of the several states in conventions of the people, there shall become an amendment to the national Constitution.

In fact and law, the 14th Amendment is no law at all.

The 39th Congress did not follow the constitutional procedures under Article 5 of the national Constitution. Black brothers, we are free of this criminal government that has attempted to keep our race under perpetual slavery.

PENETRATION Fostergate II

The continuing saga of the information Washington hopes to keep from America and the World.

Was Vince Foster the subject of a counterintelligence investigation on suspicion of selling state secrets to Israel? And if so, did that investigation stem from the CIA having discovered Foster's activities by tapping into the computers of Mossad, Israel's secret intelligence service? Did the CIA subsequently hack into the computers of certain Swiss banks where Foster allegedly stashed the millions Israel paid him for the information?

These are the disturbing questions that journalist James Norman raised last month in Media Bypass. Critics charge that neither the CIA nor the National Security Agency (NSA) are technologically adept enough to pull off such a Herculean operation, especially for so long a time. Moreover, critics find it preposterous that the computer systems into which U.S. spy agencies allegedly penetrated lacked the necessary sophisticated security measures to prevent or alert to such breaches.

Regardless of such arguments, though, there's one thing that the criticism cannot dispel: Brainstorming by the National Security Council (NSC) in the early Reagan years did result in the creation of a computer-spying operation in which financial institutions, foreign intelligence agencies and the computer infrastructures of terrorist operations were targeted for covert penetration.

The initiative was a full-court press authorized by President Reagan to gain surreptitious and undetected access to the computers of banks, foreign spy agencies and governments worldwide using bugged hardware and software typically sold through unsuspected front companies operated by either the CIA or the NSA.

The hackers, technicians and analysts who reportedly tracked the money flows from various Israeli government accounts to Foster do exist. They were once cumulatively known as "Division D." They are cyber-blackbag job specialists who, among other things, arrange for monitoring of intelligence targets through bugged software and hardware that these targets unknowingly buy from carefully concealed CIA front companies, and through subsidiaries of easily recognized but unsuspected defense contractors.

For example, in the case of the infamous Middle East terrorist group, the Abu Nidal Organization (ANO), a handful of CIA proprietary companies became exclusive suppliers to the ANO for sophisticated computer and communications gear — all bugged, of course.

Meanwhile, in concert with NSA communications-intercept technicians, "Division D" agents conduct break-ins to install eavesdropping devices that Bob Woodward described in his book, "Veil," as being "far ahead of the movies and the spy novels." Indeed, they include highly classified, miniaturized devices manufactured by the NSA, known as "Van Eck" receivers.

These tiny bugs capture the electromagnetic signals emitted by computer keyboards, monitors and printers, then relay them to a nearby receiver in a parked vehicle, or amplified for pickup by an NSA satellite that broadcasts the data to a waiting NSA facility. The FBI alluded to using these devices to monitor CIA spy Aldrich Ames in court documents.

Other eavesdropping tools include specially constructed microchips that can store and "burst-transmit" data to a waiting NSA satellite dedicated to receiving the chips' high-frequency transmissions.

All of this spookery is the prodigy of the massive financial and economic intelligence-collection effort pushed by Reagan CIA Director Bill Casey. Casey was quick to see the need for a clandestine electronic financial intelligence-collection and analysis capability. By 1981 when Reagan was elected president, the world was afloat in a sea of dirty, untraceable money that had corrupted, and was continuing to corrupt, entire governments. What was needed was a way to identify the lifeblood, the money, of the enemies of democracy — be they spies, Communist despots, terrorists, narco-traffickers, arms dealers or big time white-collar criminal gangs.

The NSA was keenly aware of the need for such intelligence and was already actively engaged in developing technologies that could fill the void, according to an NSA officer who retired in 1981. Casey was appalled to find that the best financial intelligence was, for the most part, manually obtained in traditional HUMINT (human intelligence) fashion by placing CIA agents, or paying informants like bookkeepers and auditors, inside seamy banks like BCCI, a top CIA intelligence target.

At BCCI, Casey found tidbits on the financial affairs of the KGB, the PLO and Abu Nidal, all of whom were BCCI clients, that were written down and hand-delivered to CIA case officers or sent by courier to CIA headquarters in Langley, Virg., in the form of copied and stolen records. It was a process repeated at other banks frequented by assorted global bad guys the CIA was interested in.

The Reagan newcomers were shocked at the depth of the technological void of this intelligence abyss, and within a few years of their arrival the application of computer technology to the financial world was made a top priority.

Dr. Norman "Norm" Bailey, an economist and senior policy planning director of the NSC's National Security Planning Group — where the issues, objectives and technical requirements of the computerized overhaul of intelligence collection were hashed out — laid the groundwork for the cyber-intelligence apparatus of the 1980s and 1990s. Bailey's team at the NSC realized that the enemies of democracy could be dealt with only by bringing cutting-edge computer technologies to bear against them.

In Bailey's own words in testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee in August, 1989: "We initiated a program at the planning office at the NSC to address certain security problems such as illegal technology transfer, funding of guerrilla and terrorist activities, aspects of the debt crisis and the evasion of government-decreed boycotts and embargoes by means of an innovative program which eventually came to be known by the nickname, 'follow the money.' This program was designed to

In 1981, the incoming Reagan administration launched a concentrated effort to penetrate bank computers containing information on assorted global bad guys.

(apply computerized signals interception with artificial intelligence to analyze) financial flows originating in or resulting from these activities."

What Bailey proposed was an entirely new clandestine intelligence-collection mission. The most sensitive of its operations was also the most ambitious, since its objective was to try to electronically isolate and monitor the estimated $300 billion earned from criminal enterprises each year, which is injected directly into the digital maelstrom of the tens of billions, sometimes trillions, of dollars in financial transactions that take place each day.

Casey's plan to tap this electronic money flow called for using "black ops" money to penetrate the international banking community's communications systems, which was easily enough done by the NSA when it came to the world's three principal electronic funds-transfer systems: Fedwire (operated by the Federal Reserve and linking 11,000 depository institutions), CHIPS (Clearinghouse Interbank Payments System, operated by the New York Clearing House Association) and SWIFT (Brussels-based Society for Worldwide Interbank Financial Telecommunications, which connects more than 3,000 banks).

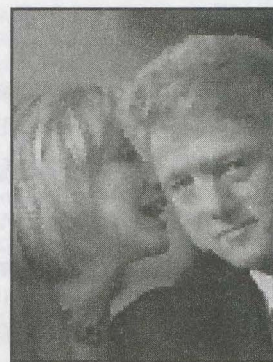

Constrained by the secrecy oath he took, Bailey would concede only that within a few years after the operation was conceptualized by the NSC, the NSA had begun to vacuum up mountains of data by listening in on bank-wire traffic. To get at more intimate banking records, however, the operation involved getting bugged data-management software installed at targeted banks. Software believed to have been used for this purpose was developed by Inslaw, a small Washington-based company.

The problem is that the government stole the software, called PROMIS, from Inslaw. Two federal courts and the House Judiciary Committee concluded that the Justice Department — for whom Inslaw developed the software — hijacked it. The judiciary committee went a step further to say evidence indicated the software was embedded with a trap door that allowed the CIA and NSA entry into any computer running it.

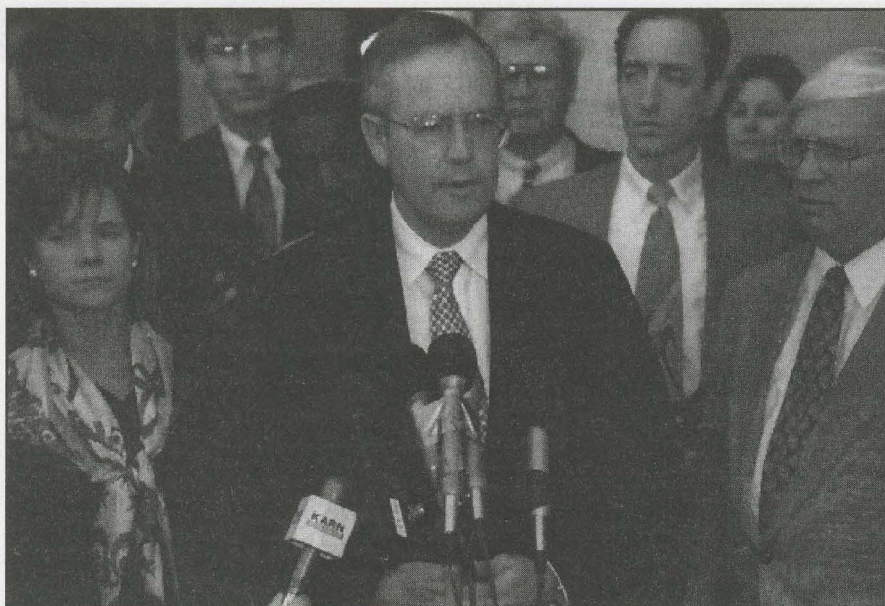

Bailey didn't confirm this, but he acknowledged with a particularly knowing smile in an interview at his Washington office that if such software existed which had an exploitable intelligence capability, there were people who wouldn't have thought twice about stealing it for that purpose.

The operation to penetrate banks' and foreign governments' computers with bugged hardware and software endures as one of Casey's major accomplishments. According to knowledgeable sources, the CIA continues to secure the cooperation of companies manufacturing banking software in monitoring the computers of banks in which this software is installed.

Hillary Clinton's relationship with Vince Foster may well have some bearing on the "Fostergate" case, according to the special prosecutor's office.

Kenneth Starr

Whitewater special prosecutor Kenneth Starr has received more than 100 crates of files on these matters. The degree to which he will act on the information remains to be seen.

The program is one of the successes Casey most liked to brag about while he was alive. He used to gloat around senior CIA officers about having secured a steady flow of data from the real, secret sets of books kept by many large foreign banks that showed hidden investing by the Soviet Union. He was proud of the fact that the penetration of banks had allowed the CIA to virtually bring the Abu Nidal Organization to its knees.

By 1986, the CIA, through the installation of bugged software at BCCI and other banks, was getting the most intimate financial details of terrorist groups like Abu Nidal.

The CIA was able to determine that Nidal, using the pseudonym Shakir Farhan, was depositing millions of dollars of operating capital into the London BCCI branch, and that he frequently used an intermediary based in London to make these deposits. The software enabled the CIA to identify ANO agents throughout Europe.

That an operation to electronically spy on financial institutions for at least two of the purposes Bailey outlined — the debt crisis in Latin America in the early 1980s, and the effect of U.S. economic embargoes, such as the one against the regime of Panamanian strongman Manuel Noreiga — is evidenced by a variety of sources, several of whom are high-level officials of the Justice Department, and by classified information leaked to Media Bypass.

To monitor the debt crisis in Latin America, which in the 1980s was a significant national security concern, five past and present officials of the Department of Justice (three of whom are now senior executives there) separately say Reagan administration Justice officials cooperated with the

"It is totally accurate" that PROMIS was provided to the World Bank for intelligence purposes and that it "went to a cross-section of (other) financial institutions ...it was made available for these other purposes after it was fraudulently misappropriated — after that, all else became possible," said the highest-ranking Justice official.

CIA in getting PROMIS installed at the World Bank. They say the CIA wanted an "early warning" to the failure of Latin American banks, whose teetering defaults to the West and especially to the United States in the early 1980s was a documented and serious economic and national security policy problem.

"It is totally accurate" that PROMIS was provided to the World Bank for intelligence purposes and that it "went to a cross-section of (other) financial institutions...it was made available for these other purposes after it was fraudulently misappropriated — after that, all else became possible," said the highest-ranking Justice official.

A former computer systems specialist who worked for a company in the early 1980s that was contracted to maintain and service computers at the World Bank's computer center says that in June 1983, a Digital Equipment Corp. VAX 32-bit computer "suddenly showed up" with "this PROMIS software on it...it was referred to openly as PROMIS." The source says PROMIS was somehow being used to manage international message traffic, and that the World Bank was still using PROMIS when he left in 1986.

Several top World Bank computer systems specialists and managers confirmed that the bank acquired 32-bit VAXs made by Digital in the early 1980s. They also confirmed that two of them were used in the "cable room" for international message traffic. Another was used for "financial forecasting."

When questioned about its use of PROMIS by Inslaw attorney Elliot Richardson, World Bank officials said they conducted a thorough investigation and could find no records of the bank having ever used or purchased software known by name PROMIS. Justice also said it could find no evidence that officials there had ever provided the bank with any version of PROMIS in Justice's possession.

Nevertheless, whether it was derived using PROMIS or software like it, classified information made available to Media Bypass clearly shows World Bank transactions with foreign governments, details of international banking transactions and foreign governments' financial affairs have been of keen interest to policy makers, and that such information is being collected using highly classified sources and methods.

Classified reports particularly show policy-makers' ability to task intelligence agencies to specifically collect economic intelligence for purposes of analyzing foreign governments' evasions of U.S. boycotts and embargoes, like the intelligence that was collected to identify how Manuel Noreiga was weathering the economic sanctions imposed against his regime in 1988. It showed Noreiga was surviving on illicit moneys.

Scores of intelligence sources say U.S. intelligence agencies have the capability to plug or hack their way into computers that they want to get into, such as Jim Norman reported was done with Mossad's computers. But was that the case, as Norman quoted sources as saying, in the matter of what the CIA allegedly dug up on Foster?

On that count, the jury is still out.

For the Record

• The "Anti-Terrorist" bill (HR 1710) and similar legislation are comparable to the Alien & Sedition Acts of the late 1700s, which proved to destroy freedom of speech for private individuals and the press — nullification of First Amendment Rights, according to countless historians, the Library of Congress and the Encyclopedia Americana Vol. 1. 1979.

A heated debate ultimately denounced the acts as unconstitutional. You, as freedom-loving Americans, should likewise enter the current debate by making your wishes known to all members of Congress. There are already ample laws on the books to punish those who would perpetrate such attacks as the April 19 bombing in Oklahoma City. The bottom line, if HR 1710 passes: More control on you and your family by "Big Brother," determined to quiet those who could expose their corruption.

• Wonder why President Clinton stopped short of imposing tariffs on Japanese car imports? The answer lies hidden from most Americans because the "other media" simply won't tell you.

The reasons are clear: Such tariffs are forbidden by the GATT/WTO language, unless America is prepared to pay the price. According to Pat Choate, political economist with the Manufacturing Policy Project, "In this particular case, we blinked because we didn't have the cards. If this case had gone to the World Trade Organization, as it was going to do, we would have lost. There would have been sanctions imposed against the United States of about five to six billion dollars. Japan would have then had the right to apply those sanctions against any American company operating in Japan." Isn't the truth enlightening?

• Republican tax cuts for you? Don't spend them yet. The congressional budget resolution sets a goal of $245 billion in NET tax cuts over seven years. "But it is not guaranteed," according to the June 30 Kiplinger Tax Letter.

"Senators cannot begin to vote tax cuts until budget experts certify a balanced budget would be reached in 2002. Of the $245 billion in tax cuts offered, $170 billion would be 'paid for' by interest saved because of reductions in the cost of government borrowing between now and 2002. No provision is made for paying for the other $75 billion... that task is left to congressional committees to work out along the way."

Is there a dime's worth of difference between either party?

• According to an April report issued by the Medicare Trustees, which includes Clinton cabinet secretaries Donna Shalala, Robert Reich and Robert Rubin, the Medicare Trust Fund will be bankrupt by the year 2002.

As early as next year, the government will be spending $1 billion more than it takes in, and Medicare Part A will be $7 billion in the red in 2002. The Medicare Hospital-Insurance Trust Fund, which the federal government has tricked us into depending on, will become insolvent in 2002.

Medicare expenditures: 1966, $3.4 billion; 1970, $7.2 billion; 1975, $14.8 billion; 1980, $35 billion; and 1990, $109 billion. The 1995 expenditure is expected to surpass $181 billion. Medicare growth cycles are growing more rapidly than those in the private sector. With a track record like that, is there any wonder why Clinton and some members of Congress want to have "Big Brother" control the health-care system?

• In 1914 we had just 14 pages of federal income tax law. Today we have more than 9,000 pages. What about the cost of enforcement?

According to Rep. Jon Christensen (R-Neb.), "A decade ago the IRS commissioned a study that said that it cost $159 billion in compliance, i.e. extortion. Today it cost nearly $500 billion in compliance costs alone."

Could one conclude that shutting down the IRS would effectively eliminate our annual budget deficit?

• Rep. Michael Castle (R-Del.), chairman of the House Banking Subcommittee on Domestic and International Monetary Policy, has scheduled a series of public hearings into the future of money.

The first session will focus on "The Future of Money: An Examination Into the Current and Prospective Role of All Forms of Money and Monetary Substitutes." Expected to testify are those pioneering various forms of electronic money, including debit cards and cybercash.

• The United Nations: Only 48 of 185 member countries had paid in full their regular budget dues by the end of May. The United States, which pays about one-third of peacekeeping expenses and one-fourth of the regular budget, is the biggest debtor, owing about $1.18 billion.

A rather elementary question that ought to be addressed is: If you can't pay the mortgage on your own house, do you go ahead and start to pay for your neighbor's? That seems to be the logic behind our federal government, regardless of the political party.

A Conservative Senate?

The Senate Appropriations Subcommittee has deleted language pertaining to abortions from the House-approved

INSIDE WASHINGTON

THE UNDERHILL REPORT

Treasury-Postal spending bill (H.R. 2020). The bill would block federal employee health-plan beneficiaries from obtaining abortions. This issue will be addressed again on the Senate floor.

Senate Continues AIDS Funding

The Senate has overwhelmingly passed legislation to reauthorize federal AIDS-care programs. The bill (S. 641) would fund through fiscal year 2000 the AIDS-care program, which through enormous funding is to provide comfort and counseling to people with AIDS. Amendments attached by Sen. Jesse Helms (R-N.C.) include: A provision that federal workers are not required to attend AIDS-awareness programs at their offices (passed 99-0), and another that would prohibit program funds from being used by groups that promote homosexuality (passed 55-45).

Arms Embargo On Bosnia

The Senate passed with bipartisan support a bill (S.21) which would terminate U.S. participation in the U.N. arms embargo against Bosnia. The bill passed 69-29 - two votes more than the Senate will need to override a veto promised by Clinton. A president who believes that we should be the world's police force is a president who will soon learn that the American people don't.

Shame On Congress

The first-ever outside audit of the House books has handed Republican leaders hard evidence of what many have long contended:

Under the Democrats, the House was in financial shambles. Funds were poorly accounted for and many times overspent, and members were most often the guilty parties.

The Republicans have a problem: How aggressively should they pursue violations of House rules and federal statutes governing official spending now that they control the institution? Without naming names, (what's new?), the audit turned up 2,100 instances of possible double payments to members, staff and credit card companies for travel expenses during late 1993 and 1994. Records also indicate that within that same time frame, five unnamed members overspent their office allowances.

Where is the "other media" coverage of this? I am aware that most people already knew that corruption runs amuck in Congress, but the "other media" could at least chime in. Maybe it's a conspiracy theory!

For What It's Worth

On these two pages I generally try to provide information about legislation and congressional activities in the hope that you will be better informed. With that in mind I hope this helps:

The Waco Hearings

The government has admitted that many mistakes were made, but add to the list of allegations the charge that Democrats such as Rep. Charles E. Schumer (D-NY) openly lied to Congress and to the American people.

When the discussion of CS gas was brought up, Schumer, in his sarcastic way, stated that CS gas is the mildest form of tear gas. You may want to call Schumer and tell him that tear gas is not CS, but CN. You may also wish to relate that according to the CS gas manufacturer's own manual, CS gas is 80 times more powerful than tear gas.

Where were the "truth seeking" Republicans to correct him? Furthermore, Ambrose Evans-Pritchard, Washington correspondent for the London Sunday Telegraph, reported that 15-year-old witness Kiri Jewell, who claims David Koresh had abused her, was actually living in California at the time she claimed she was at the Davidian compound in Waco, Texas.

The lies about exactly what happened aren't confined to Democrats. Republican sweetheart Rush Limbaugh stated on August 1 in regards to the Waco hearings, "If Clinton knew, who cares?" Limbaugh also claims to know for sure that the Davidians set the fire, and did it long before any "tear gas" was pumped into the building.

The Whitewater Hearings

Sen. Alphonse D'Amato (R-NY) promised fair and complete congressional hearings. Why then did he uphold the incredibly flawed Fiske report?

Miguel Rodriguez, the lead prosecutor examining Foster's death, quit over reports that his investigation was being obstructed and he therefore could not conduct a full-blown probe into the "official version of Foster's death." Based on the "other media's" performance during the 1980s, this should have been headline news; as fate would have it, there was hardly a mention.

The direction of the present hearings leads one to believe that the truth is of scant interest to Congress. If Mr. D'Amato continues to look the other way with regard to the suspicious circumstances, could it not be said that he is, intentionally or not, helping the White House cover up?

You can bet your last nickel that we will not give up until the truth is learned and shared with all Americans. As a concerned American, you will make a difference by making your voice heard in Washington.

Notable Mention

Megan Brown, a senior at St. Claire (Missouri) High School, was selected as the winner of the "Tenth Amendment Essay Contest" sponsored by the Franklin County Scholarship for Constitutional Research.

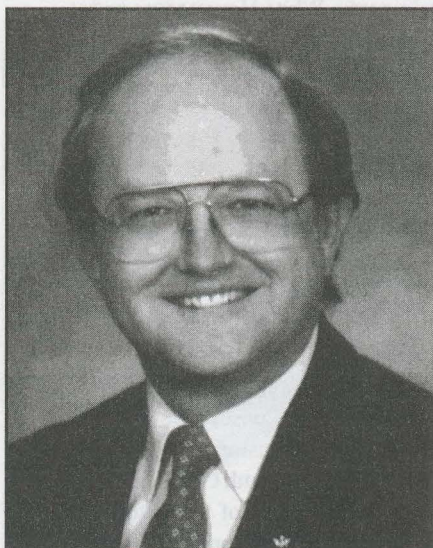

In her conclusion, Ms. Brown quotes Hugh Legare of South Carolina: "He wrote: 'Upon examination of the actual course of national legislation, one will find that the government has been fundamentally altered — that instead of being any longer one of enumerated powers, as it was beyond all doubt intended...it is interfering in the domestic concerns of society and threatens to control all the pursuits, interests, opinions, and conduct of men.'

"This prophetic statement, a reasonable criticism of the relationship observable today, was uttered over 150 years ago...The battle for freedom continues today, as does the struggle for the proper balance between national pursuits and the states' powers. In this battle, each citizen is a soldier."

With young people writing like this, there is still hope. My hat is off to you, Ms. Brown.

As always, it is strongly recommended that you voice your demands to your congressional members. You must be heard. The best course of action is to call Washington D.C., and not their local offices. The toll-free Capitol Hill switchboard number is 1-800-972-3524 or on your dime (202) 224-3121. Make that call, because, if we don't take a stand and put an end to the cover-ups and deceit out of Washington, the only way our children and grandchildren will know about freedom will be to look it up in a dictionary.

NAFTA, GATT and Reality

Last year, following the elections that threw Tom Foley and Dan Rostenkowski out on their ears, the lame duck Congress (with those two still in place) passed the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). Following President Clinton's lead, our pro-business Republican leadership fell into lock step with this proposal which was to revolutionize international trading. Global interests, both foreign and domestic, hawked GATT's virtues as the culmination of 25 years of negotiation.

If you remember, GATT eliminates, or substantially reduces, virtually all import and export duties. It also created a World Trade Organization (WTO), before which disagreements between nations could be argued and debated. GATT then granted WTO unprecedented powers, even including declaring a particular state law (yes, I said state law) to be invalid if that law should conflict with GATT.

The only congressperson known to have labored through reading the 22,000 pages of GATT was Colorado Sen. Hank Brown, who switched his vote from yes to no upon reading about the sacrifice of not only our state, but also our national sovereignty to the WTO. A vote for GATT, at its very best, treated that senator's oath of office with pure contempt. It was, some said, contemptible congressional arrogance of the First Magnitude.

Nonsense, said the international businesses. GATT was needed because it meant jobs and America needs jobs. And the myriad of duties and laws among nations needed an independent organization to sit in judgment. Besides, they asked, what was the nation of origin for a car that was 1/3 from Japan, 1/3 from Canada, and 1/3 from the United States, anyway?

We frequently do not realize the importance of an issue until it hits close to home. A zealot against drunk driving becomes so after losing a loved one due to alcohol, for example, or some of the most ardent anti-smokers are former smokers. You get the idea.

It is also true that this column frequently deals with oppressive national issues and there are times when the connection to state interests is not obvious. There are, however, many laws at the state level that come about directly because of federal influence.

Now, Colorado Springs feels the effects of GATT on our local economy, up close and personal, as they say. This happened when Quantum Corp. announced on July 11 that it would close its Colorado Springs disk drive manufacturing plant by mid-1996, and up to 1,300 local employees could lose their jobs. Quantum's intention is to move the disk drive operations to Malaysia, where labor costs are $2 per hour versus $7 per hour for Colorado Springs.

Labor costs are not the major component of costs for disk drives. Sophisticated manufacturing technology and exotic materials comprise the bulk of cost for these high capacity drives. The real clincher was stated to be a 10-year exemption from all taxes by Malaysia. Now, since GATT virtually eliminated import/export duties, there was no economic consequence to producing off-shore, as most of the other major disk-drive manufacturers had already begun doing.

It was not so stated, but undoubtedly the federal income taxes, OSHA regulations, insurance requirements and regulatory environment translated to costs in the U. S. that would float to the bottom line off-shore. It was also not stated, but Colorado's income tax, personal property tax, worker's comp environment and high local taxes on all aspects of business had to be a factor.

Quantum had only purchased that facility from Digital Equipment Corp. last October, just before the November elections.

Did Quantum know even then, that, if GATT passed, they would move off-shore? Only the most naive would believe they did not.

Did Quantum, and other companies like it, put excessive pressure on Congress for the passage of GATT to complete their plans to exit America? Did the leaders of Congress know, when they greased the skids for GATT's passage, the result would be a net decline in jobs for America? Yes and yes, to be sure.

So now the local corporate socialists are telling the individual taxpayer that we must bribe the companies by offering similar deals in order to retain their presence. But we have a responsibility to those companies that have been here and choose to stay here.

No incentive should be offered that is not available to other companies. And as companies either leave or eliminate their tax burden through special legislation and the state legislature simultaneously pushes up spending to the maximum every year, the individual taxpayer must pick up the slack. Who will pull the wagon when everyone wants to ride?

The actions of Congress in passing GATT put several more nails in the coffin of American manufacturing. At some point, the only meaningful question to ask is, would the last one out please turn off the lights?
